Poppies Made By World War Vets

Auxiliary Employs Soldier Boys In Making the Poppies

Citizens of North Wilkesboro will be in no danger of wearing a foreign-made flower to honor American heroes when they put on their American Legion Auxiliary poppies on Poppy Day. This assurance was given today by Mrs. W. R. Absher, chairman of the Auxiliary's poppy committee, as preparations for the distribution of memorial poppies Saturday were being rushed to completion.

"Foreign-made American flags and foreign-made 'Buy American' signs may have been offered for sale in this country, but there is no such thing as a foreign-made American Legion Auxiliary poppy," Mrs. Absher said. "Artificial poppies can be purchased very cheaply from foreign countries and when the custom of wearing these flowers in honor of the World War dead was first established they were imported in large numbers. The American Legion and Auxiliary quickly took action against this practice. For years every poppy offered by the women of the Auxiliary has been made in America by an American veteran.

"Realizing that the disabled American veteran was under a heavy handicap in the competition for work, the Auxiliary has endeavored to establish poppy making as an industry exclusively for him. Disabled veterans are now making an average of 10,000,000 poppies a year for the Auxiliary, hundreds being employed during the winter and spring months and earning a total of $100,000 a year. This year, with millions of able-bodied men unable to find employment, employment possibilities for the disabled veterans were almost nil and the poppy making has proved a great boon to them.

"The number of veterans the Auxiliary can employ during the coming year will depend upon the response to the sale Saturday, May 27. If the poppies are taken freely by the public, we will be able to increase the number of disabled men given employment in the hospitals and workrooms."
