"Round Up The Laggards And The Cheats"

The National Industrial Recovery program occupies the limelight at the moment and many people who are willing enough to cooperate, if they knew just what co-operation they could give, are anxious to learn all they can that will enlighten them as to their individual obligation to the program.

The big drive for individual support is now in progress. The masses are being called upon to support NRA members. Their support will be in the nature of purchases from those enrolled under the Blue Eagle and the pressure of their massed opinion against laggards and cheats.

Collier's, the National Weekly, speaks editorially of the laggards and cheats. The editorial is so timely that despite its length, we reproduce it in full:

"For the moment business men are under no violent compulsion to co-operate with the government in putting into effect industrial recovery.

"The law gives the President power to compel co-operation and provides penalties for obstructionists. Mr. Roosevelt, however, has announced his intention not to use these penalties immediately. He has preferred to seek the voluntary co-operation of industry.

"The majority of decent men and women are gladly co-operating. After all, every one of every class has a solid, selfish interest in the restoration of the nation's buying power. Only a fool or a fanatic could oppose the purpose which the recovery act was designed to accomplish. Nobody outside of bedlam is against the return of prosperity.

"Still there are some who are perfectly willing to let others make all the sacrifices in any good cause. These gentry inevitably come to the surface in an emergency. They are busy now attempting to wrest mean advantages out of the new freedom allowed under the National Industrial Recovery Act.

"A more stupid policy could not be adopted. Congress let down the bars erected by the old anti-trust laws and authorized business men to co-operate in the solution of their problems.

Many of these problems antedate the depression. Abuses, very costly abuses, had arisen. Intelligent business men were aghast to clean house, but the old law called to operation conspiracy and provided prison sentences for such conspirators, however honorable their designs.

"The recovery act eliminates all of this. To stimulate employment and to increase national buying power, the anti-trust laws are suspended. What was so lately forbidden as criminal conspiracy is now desirable co-operation.

"American business has never had so magnificent an opportunity. The government has in effect said: 'Go ahead and show what you can do. Settle your common problems together. Abandon cutthroat competition. Establish fair wages and decent conditions. Charge reasonable prices. Take defensible profits. You are free from the penalties of anti-trust laws.'

"The government did not say, however, 'Go ahead and gyp your employees. Reclaim their so that you can lower the actual wages paid. Shift their hours so that they are deprived of the benefits of a shorter working week. Speed up your machines so that you can get out more goods in eight hours than you formerly got in ten. Exercise your wits to devise ingenious ways of cheating your workers and the public. Be disloyal to the national interest. Fatten your own purse while the pickings are easy.'

"The government gave no such advice and neither the government, public opinion, nor the honest men in business will tolerate such behavior. The same law which allows this new freedom to act in the public interest also provides the authority to destroy those who refuse to co-operate.

"We shall be fortunate if it never becomes necessary to inflict these penalties. Punishment will, however, be meted out; outraged public opinion will insist upon drastic punishment if there are scandalous attempts to

The burden of enforcing the recovery act and of restoring normal economic life must be borne by the honorable majority in every branch of industry. First of all, self-respecting men will be governed by the spirit of the new code.

"Justice, intelligent self-interest and a decent regard for the opinions of mankind unite in demanding that every good citizen exert himself—and herself—to bring about that industrial recovery which is essential to our national well-being. Thousands of business houses have already taken the necessary action. The majority were eager to co-operate in this great undertaking.

"Those organized in trade associations have also the opportunity to exert pressure upon the laggards and the cheats. Industry has the chance to prove its capacity for self-reliance.

"Members of a trade association know how their associates and competitors in the same industry are behaving. If a business house is using devious means to violate the spirit of the recovery code, word of what is happening gets around. It is the privilege and the duty of honorable men to bring these shirkers and cheats to book. An unscrupulous minority cannot be allowed to nullify our national recovery. The public interest must prevail.

There is nothing in the recovery act and in the codes adopted to give it force and effect which it would not have been reasonable to do any time in the past twenty-five years. What is now being attempted and accomplished is merely a belated effort to make industry conform to the principles upon which this republic was founded.

"The restoration of purchasing power means that American workers must be paid enough for their labor to enable them to support themselves and their families. This goal must be reached. Honest, energetic men and women will not permanently look to charity for their maintenance. If American industry as historically organized will not or cannot pay living wages, then inevitably some more efficient organization of industry will be attempted.

"The recovery act is in a very real sense a last call. Business has the opportunity now thoughtfully and carefully to do what must be done. If business hesitates or refuses to act, the government will act under the driving force of an outraged and angry public opinion.

"Now is the time of times for self-reliant, honest leaders of industry to assert themselves and to work with one another and the government. Observe the law, exert pressure on others to abide by its spirit, and aid in restoring the prosperity of the nation. The opportunity is here today. It will not linger indefinitely."

Better Mail Service Needed

Efforts to obtain a better out-going mail service for North Wilkesboro should not be abandoned. Under our present arrangement, the two mails leaving the city for the Piedmont section depart so close together that either mail could be eliminated without serious impairment to the service.

The facts are these: If at 7 o'clock in the morning we desired a package from Winston-Salem, we write a letter for it. The letter goes off in the afternoon and arrives in Winston-Salem about 6 p. m. By that time the house from which we desire the service is closed. The next morning, Mr. Business Man gets his mail and puts our package in the postoffice. But there is no mail leaving for North Wilkesboro that day. It left before he got the package ready. In consequence, we wait until the following day for our package.

Surely some better arrangement can be made. By all means, there should be a morning mail leaving North Wilkesboro. Our civic organizations will be rendering a real service if they keep hammering away on this proposition until some favorable action is taken.

Gold In Forests

The article by Mr. Graeber on the forests on the J. M. German farm at Boomer explains the value of forest cultivation.

Valued at $20 per acre, the land on which the trees stand has paid a net annual income of $2 per acre. This means, of course, that the pines have paid the taxes and cost of labor, leaving a little more than six per cent interest on the investment. Which is a pretty neat return.

Foresters carefully thinned will pay and the many splendid messages sent out by the late Col. H. C. Landon during his residence in the city should not be forgotten. Our forests are among our greatest assets and if properly protected will yield large returns.

The Italian who flew upside down for an hour was probably only trying to accommodate himself to this world of ours.—Dallas news.

Mountain Section

Trip Is Described By S. F. Moore In Sumter, S. C. Daily Newspaper

(By S. F. Moore In Sumter Daily Item)

Dalzell, Aug. 25.—Mr. C. L. Cummings, family and I left Dalzell Tuesday, August 1st for our annual trip to the mountains. Arrived at Ferguson, N. C. (wife's old home at 6:30.

Crops along the route were rather below normal. Very dry in places. After resting for two days we, in company with Mr. Thomas W. Ferguson, a farmer of this section, and Mr. Don Ferguson of Los Angeles, Cal., set out on a tour through the scenic mountains of Western North Carolina. Our first stop was Lenoir, the county seat of Caldwell county. When I was in school at Globe Academy in 1887 Lenoir was a mere village. Now it is a bustling little manufacturing city. It ranks about fourth or fifth in manufacturing furniture in the United States. Our next stop was at Blowing Rock, a famous resort on the very crest of the Blue Ridge. I have sat on the famous projecting rock in the sunshine and looked down on top of the clouds in Globe valley while they were having copious rains in the valley below.

From here we wended our way down the scenic Yonalossa to the foot of Grandfather mountain, the highest mountain in this section. Threatening clouds forbade us ascending to the loftiest peak.

From here we went to Linville, a lovely resort, chiefly for the wealthy, on the banks of Linville river. Then we wended our way down the picturesque Linville valley to the falls about 10 miles distant. At the falls the river makes a leap of about 60 feet into one of the most rugged and picturesque gorges in this section.

From the falls we crossed over and struck the Asheville highway near Spruce Pines. We then ascended the lovely valley of North Toe River. This section is famous for its mica mines. It is said this section furnishes more than 50 per cent of the world's supply of mica. The rocks from which the mica is extracted is transported from the lofty peaks by means of cables. A most wonderful and unique device. Leaving here we passed through Pinola, Minneapolis and Plum Tree. We spent a short time in Cranberry where there is a mine of iron ore. For some reason, the mine is not operating at present.

From here we went to Banner Elk, the home of Lees-McTae junior college. Leaving here we went down a veritable gorge for Watauga river.

From here we reached the crest and looked down into the lovely Cove creek valley we saw a scene of beauty.

Boone Trail Highway runs through this valley from Boone to Tennessee.

I have had the pleasure of sailing up the Hudson river on the day boat, from New York. In magnitude this valley is not in a class with the Palisades, yet the towering peaks on either side of the Cove creek valley are crossed the lofty peaks of a ruggedly as fascinating as the Hudson scenery.

When in this section I always stop at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Mast, seven miles from Boone. He runs an unusually large general store and Mrs. Mast runs a boarding house. They are the last word in industry and genuine Southern hospitality. From here we went to Boone, the thriving county seat of Watauga county and formerly the home of the famous pioneer, Daniel Boone. From here we returned to Ferguson. Sunday we had the pleasure of attending the family reunion of the Moore family in Globe valley. Here I met many old friends and schoolmates. Some I had not seen since 1887. We returned to Dalzell Tuesday, August 8.
