Buying Urged

The "buy now" campaign is now in full progress and the success of the NRA program is dependent to no little extent upon the results of this campaign.

Every individual, especially those whose wages have been increased due to the NRA program, should realize that money spent wisely at this time will go far toward maintaining and increasing the present wage levels. Jobs cannot be given by employers if there is no market for the products they manufacture. So our hearty co-operation in this "buy now" movement is essential to the future of business.

Buying now will save money and will also aid materially in the drive for stabilization of business.

"Hurrah For Wilkes"

Under the caption, "Hurrah For Wilkes," the Raleigh News and Observer congratulates Wilkes upon the showing made in the 4-H corn show at the State Fair and pays tribute to County Agent A. G. Hendren whose work among the farm boys has been outstanding.

The News and Observer says:

Wilkes county corn club members walked away with the 4-H corn show at the State Fair by taking all the honors in sight with a single exception. County Agent A. G. Hendren, under whose direction the corn was grown, has reason to be proud of his boys. And Wilkes county has reason to be proud of its county agent. He is putting it on the corn map. Wilkes has wonderful farm lands, and grows wonderful crops. It is a great county.

The Journal-Patriot echoes these sentiments and adds that a couple of hurrahs should be given for Wilkes apples and Wilkes poultry which also came through with striking victories.

County Agent A. G. Hendren has worked untiringly for the improvement of farming methods and the success of Wilkes products at the State Fair is evidence that his efforts have not been in vain.

Getting Bargains?

Are you one of the bargain hunters who buy ten or twelve gallons of gasoline and go gallivanting off to greener pastures to buy bargains? If so, you will probably be interested in the Caldwell Record's analysis of bargain hunting.

The full picture as presented by the Lenoir newspaper follows:

"Approximately fifty Lenoir shoppers went to Charlotte for 'Dollar Day.' They walked all over a hot crowded city and searched frantically through hot crowded stores to find the same things they could have bought as reasonably and as satisfactorily at home. There were very few real bargains bought, and very few exclusive styles that could not have been obtained from Lenoir merchants. Most of the shoppers spent more money than they had planned to spend, came home with a headache, and used enough gas to have bought a new hat, or pair of hose and gloves.

"There was a reason for the Lenoir folks going down there, and it is one that our tradespeople would do well to consider. The Charlotte paper, for a week before that day, carried page after page of good advertising. They showed pictures and attractive accounts of the goods they were offering for sale. High pressure advertising was employed to the nth degree, and if the Lenoir papers had carried proportionately as much advertising that week, the number of people who bought school clothes, winter suits, hats and household goods in Charlotte would have been reduced by more than enough to make it pay.

"How do we know? This morning a woman came to the office. She asked if we had an Asheville paper, and explained that her husband was going to Asheville on a business trip tomorrow, and she wanted to see what the stores were advertising. She had nothing special to buy, she had a little money; not very much, but enough to be worth any merchant's attention, so she looked for the store that put out the best advertising. She hunted her up an Asheville paper, and she was especially struck with an advertisement of children's sweaters. There are four children in her family who will have new sweaters from that store tomorrow night, and we know three Lenoir stores which have just as pretty and just as reasonable a line of sweaters."

Looking Ahead

It seems certain enough to us that we shall pull out of the depression about as rapidly as human affairs in the large can be expected to move. A few months from now everybody will realize that the worst has passed; a year or two from now most will have forgotten there ever was a depression.

Things are getting set for the next big upward spurt. Once we are all on solid ground again, big things are waiting to be done. New inventions, which will be the basis of new industries, have been marking time, making tentative advances, becoming perfected and developed, pending the time when the public was ready for them.

Among the things we feel certain will come about is a complete revolution in our ideas of home-building. Everything points that way. New kinds of materials, new methods of construction, new external designs, will replace the old ideas in a high percentage of the new houses that will be built in the next ten years. In forty or fifty years, nine-tenths of the buildings in the United States will have to be replaced by new ones, and the youngsters of today will live to see all houses look quite different from those of today.

We have been interested in some of the pictures and articles about the new kinds of railroad trains and locomotives which are being experimented with. We look forward to a revival of interest in the railroad as a means of transportation. Nothing has even threatened to replace the railroad for long hauls of heavy freight, but swifter and more comfortable means of transportation have affected railroad passenger business. It seems certain to us that railroad speeds of a hundred miles an hour, with air-conditioned cars which will be comfortable in all weathers, are among the promises which the near future holds.

There isn't anything that is much more fun than to watch the world and its ideas change and speculate on what will come next.

An Election School

The school of instruction for election officials, which the county board of elections has been asked to call, it is a step in the right direction.

Not infrequently, election laws are violated through ignorance of what the duties of the various officials are. This should not be the case. The law of the state of North Carolina governing the conduct of an election should be familiar to every official and then if an official wilfully violates the provisions of the law, vigorous prosecution should result.

The policy of doing the right thing in the right way will help to avoid unfounded charges of crookedness and at the same time make crookedness unpopular. A school to instruct officials in their duties will at least do away with unintentional irregularities at the polls.

BRUCE BARTON WRITES

THE STORM BREAKS

When Jesus failed to perform any miracles in Nazareth the storm broke. All the pent-up envy of the little town for one who has dared to outgrow it, gathered itself into a roar. They surged forward hurrying him through the main street to the edge of a precipice where they would have thrown him over. But the wrath which had been sufficient to conceive his destruction grew suddenly impotent when he turned and faced them. They shrank back, and before they could perform their purpose, he had passed through the midst of them and was on his way.

In his ears sounded the buzz of malicious comment, but he was too hear-sick to look back. From henceforth Capernaum became "his own city." Nazareth, the home of his youth, the dwelling place of his boyhood friends and neighbors, had given its verdict.

He had come unto his own, and his own received him not.

The brothers of Jesus had been witnesses of his defeat, and were left behind by him to bear the ignominy of it. How the sardonic laughter must have rung in their ears! These home town sneers were bad enough, but the reports that came back from other towns threw the simple unimaginative family into a panic.

It was said that he made seditious speeches; that he claimed to have a special relationship to God; that he utterly disregarded the code of the Pharisees and denounced them openly before the crowds. Such conduct could mean only one thing. He would get himself into jail, and his relatives with him.

Hence the members of his family who should have been his best helpers spent their energy in the effort to get him to go farther away from home.

"For even his brethren did not believe in him."

He was teaching one day in Capernaum to a crowd that hung spellbound on his words, when suddenly an interruption occurred. A messenger pushed through the audience to tell him that his mother and brothers were outside and insisted on speaking to him right away. A quick look of pain shot across his fine face. He knew why they had come. They had made up their minds that he was just a little bit out of his head, and they were determined to shut him up in an asylum before his extravagances should ruin them all. He drew himself up to his full height and pointing to his disciples turned to the messenger:

"My mother and brethren?" he repeated. "Behold these who believe on me, they are my mother and my brethren."

Green Again to Head Federation Of Labor

Washington, Oct. 12.—Apparently satisfied with the program of its present leaders, the American Federation of Labor in convention today reaffirmed its traditional opposition to unrestrained inflation, pledged its support to President Roosevelt's recovery program and re-elected its officers for another year.

Renewed assaults upon the federation's activities since NRA proved only short uprisings that went down under the mass of votes behind the ruling officers. Finally, President William Green turned over the gavel to another delegate and sat while John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, eulogized him and nominated him for re-election. The delegates, mindful that Lewis had participated in two attempts to lessen the strength of the controlling officers, arose and cheered.

Without further ado, the nominations were closed and Green by acclamation became the leader of more than 3,000,000 workers for another year. The eight vice presidents, who had his backing, also were re-elected, as were Frank Morrison, secretary of the federation, and Martin F. Ryan, treasurer.

Thousands of Women Have Taken Cardui on Their Mothers' Advice

It is an impressive fact that many women have said they learned of the value of Cardui from their mothers.

What stronger evidence of her confidence in a medicine could a mother have than that she advised her daughter to take it!

Cardui is given the credit for relieving so many cases of womanly suffering that it is widely and favorably known. Druggists everywhere sell it.

If you are weak, run-down, suffering monthly, take Cardui. Take it for a reasonable length of time and try it thoroughly. As your health improves, you will share the enthusiasm of thousands of women who have written to say: "Oh, how glad I am."
