Present Monetary Policy Aids Tarheel Farmer

Both the economic and the monetary policies of the federal government are bringing marked improvements in southern agricultural conditions, according to Dr. G. W. Forester, head of the department of agricultural economics at N. C. State College. In North Carolina alone, he said, the gross farm income for 1933 has been estimated at more than $200,000,000, as compared with $140,000,000 in 1932—an increase of 43 per cent. Due to lower production costs, the net income was 75 per cent higher in 1933 than in 1932.

Tobacco farmers of the south got $19,500,000 in equalization payments and increased prices resulting from adjustment activities. An additional $4,000,000 will be paid in 1934 to those who signed reduction contracts. Payments to cotton growers are expected to reach $100,000,000. These are seen largely as the outgrowth of the government's economic program.

The monetary policy of the federal government in abandoning the gold standard and boosting the price of gold has brought about a general rise of domestic prices as well as an increase in the prices of foreign trade. As the value of foreign moneys increased, the prices offered by foreign buyers for American farm products rose also. Still further rises are expected in the future to accompany the rising price of gold.

As an example, Dr. Forester pointed out, when the British pound was rated at $4.13, the average price for export tobacco was about 10 cents a pound. When the rate advanced to $4.53, the price rose to 11 cents a pound, and when the pound reached a valuation of $5.15, the export tobacco price jumped to 13 cents a pound.

Increased prices in cents per pound could be paid by British buyers without spending additional British money, he said, since the pound had increased in exchange value with the American dollar.

Hayes To Preside At Detroit Court

Native of Wilkes Designated By Chief Justice Hughes For Job

Judge Johnson J. Hayes, of United States court for the middle North Carolina district, received a designation Friday from Chief Justice Charles E. Hughes, of United States Supreme court, to preside over the district court which will be held in Detroit this month for trial of civil actions involving assessments against stockholders of two large defunct Michigan banks.

The court will be convened January 15 and will continue through January 27, the designation stipulates. Several millions of dollars are involved in the litigations which are to be called for trial during the term.

Authority is vested in the chief justice to designate a federal judge to hold court in another district when the judge of the latter district is disqualified or the pressure of work is such as to necessitate the services of another judge. Designation of Judge Hayes to preside over the court in the eastern district of Michigan was made by virtue of this authority.

Judge Hayes, now a resident of Greensboro, is a native of Wilkes. He has established an enviable reputation on the federal bench. He was designated to preside at the trial of Senator James J. Davis in New York City last fall.
