Labelled as the "Home of Tomorrow" by the hundreds of editors, writers and other famous guests who have inspected this home, it is estimated that electrical capacity equal to the efforts of 844 servants can be set to work within this dwelling at the owner's instant bidding. The spell, in other words, who answer the housewife's call, are

...According to officials of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, who are directly in charge of the Home, the "Home of Tomorrow" has been wired to consume 18,000 kilowatt hours a year, or about thirty times the amount which the average electrically equipped home now uses," Mr. Day continued.

"At first glance the home appears to be a standard brick-faced house with two roof terraces, constructed in a semi-modern mode to permit the liberal use of sun decks. The first indication of the 844 'invisible' servants is when the owner touches a button on the dashboard of his car as he turns in the driveway. This sets up a radio wave which is tuned to the set controlling the garage doors, so that these doors are automatically opened without the owner getting out of the car. These doors may be opened when the owner is a block away from his home."

Dedicated by Governor George White of Ohio to the women of America the "Home of Tomorrow" makes a forty-hour week possible and practical for the housewife. The kitchen is a veritable marvel of efficiency and convenience, and the laundry is a revelation to the women who have had to put up with the ordinary drudgery of the average home laundry.

The local Westinghouse representative went on to explain that the Home is completely air conditioned from a weather room located in the basement, so that the air breathed is cleaned, humidified, or de-humidified, warmed or cooled, according to the season. Illumination to a degree never before installed in a home provides shadowless lighting. Burglar lights, soft, glowing colored lights, concealed and cove lights,—all blend into breath-taking effects of illumination.

Automatic sliding doors, an inter-communication system within the house, infra-red and ultra-violet lamps, an automatic electric percolator installed permanently, portable telephones, bathrooms that dry towels, and doors that open at one's approach. And that isn't all. There is a nook for every mood, lights that blend with the hostess' dinner gowns, bathtubs without rings, and there is melody in every room. The bathroom floors aren't cold or slippery, the refrigerator defrosts itself at dawn and there are 320 lights waiting to be turned on at an instant's notice, the local dealer concluded.
