

Military Police Highly Trained

...that's the outstanding characteristic of the Military Police. Lt. Gen. Hugh A. Drum's First Army now spread over a million acres in North and South Carolina.

Almost 4,000 carefully chosen men are now on M. P. duty day and night in the cities, towns and rural areas of this vast military theatre, handling difficult traffic problems, seeing that soldiers conduct themselves properly, enforcing military law in the field and civil law for soldiers in the towns.

Behind the spotless and ultra-modern picture presented by any one of these thousands of M. P.'s is a story of careful selection and diligent training, which makes the M. P. of today's First Army a vastly different man from the brawny nightstick swinger so skeptically looked upon by the doughboys of World War I.

road inspectors, bridges, and trucking points, their white gloves and vests gleaming in the darkness, directing thousands of troop laden military trucks and safely routing civilian cars in the area.

Every M. P. must know how to administer first aid, whether in the field or in the towns. He is given the same elementary training in first aid practice as that which is given to members of medical detachments with regular troops. And recently, another responsibility has been added to the duties of the military policeman. He must work with all air-raid warning units, both in the towns and in the theatre of actual military operations.

In friendly territory, under war conditions, it is also within the scope of Military Police activity to plan the evacuation of civilians and military personnel; to reconnoitre and protect railroad yards; to estimate the number, location and capacity of all hospitals; to locate and protect all public utilities, particularly water supply; to coordinate all civil agencies for fire protection; and in general to work with civil agencies of all kinds wherever the conditions of war have not caused them to cease functioning altogether.

Under actual war conditions, enemy prisoners are largely handled by Military Police troops, whose duty it is to control, house and feed them, and otherwise maintain them during the length of hostilities. Military Police are carefully trained in this work, and they are putting their training into practice during the First Army maneuvers today, as Red and Blue prisoners are brought in by opposing sides.

Out of almost 4,000 Military Police on duty with the First Army in the Carolinas, about 2,000 are members of the 101st and 518th Military Police Battalions under the command of Lt. Col. Harry D. Scheibla, First Army Provost Marshal, who also coordinates the activities of all other M. P. troops in the various First Army units. Each of the three Army Corps, the I, the II, and the VI, has its own Provost Marshal with the remaining 2,000 members of the Military Police forces assigned to the eight Divisions of the First Army. There are about 250 officers and men in each divisional M. P. Company.

Blackout driving and its control are especially stressed, since so much military movement now goes on at night in pitch darkness to avoid air attack. All through the night, during the current First Army maneuvers, M. P.'s can be seen standing at Restoration of main building, Greensboro College, partially destroyed by fire on September 4, will begin as soon as specifications of architects plans are made, necessary funds to supplement insurance coverage are raised, and bids are secured. Dr. Luther L. Gobbel, president of the college has announced.

Tentative plans drawn by J. Burton Wilder, local architect, and Philip N. Youtz, consulting architect, Middlefield, Mass., provide for replacing the old rotunda with a rectangular, three-story unit which will not project quite as great a distance as the rotunda. The new portion of Main building however, will be made more spacious than the old structure by the removal of the senior parlor and the creation of one large student social center on the ground floor measuring approximately 48 by 54 feet, and flanked by the two drawing rooms now located in the east and west wings of the building. One group of fireproof stairs enclosed in masonry and running from the ground to the roof will replace the two front stairways which rise on each side of the present social center. Six dormitory rooms will be built on each side of the present social center.

Plans also include the extension of the automatic sprinkler system throughout the proposed structure. Although no detailed description of plans will be available until Mr. Wilder submits specifications to the building committee appointed by the board of trustees, the proposed facade probably will be in classic Greek tradition with eight columns rising from the ground floor to the third floor. Members of the committee, J. G. Hanes, Winston-Salem; James E. Lambeth, Thomasville; W. Y. Preyer, New York and Greensboro, and Dr. Gobbel, will meet to make further arrangements in the next few days as soon as specifications are completed.

Discussing campus building needs, Dr. Gobbel pointed out the necessity of a building for the library and art studio, formerly housed in the old rotunda, now temporarily located in the Student Activities building.

Four Stars In "The Feminine Touch"

Ultra-modern comedy with a background of literary bohemia-lam brings four stars to the screen in "The Feminine Touch," opening Thursday at the Liberty Theatre.

Rosalind Russell, Don Ameche, Kay Francis and Van Heflin create a "four-cornered" triangle in a plot of conflicting emotions. The supporting cast includes Donald Meek, Gordon Jones, Henry Danell, Sidney Blackmer, Grant Mitchell and David Clyde.

Major W. S. Van Dyke II directed the picture and Joseph Mankiewicz produced it for M-G-M. Heflin, a comparative newcomer to the screen, played opposite Katharine Hepburn on Broadway in "The Philadelphia Story."

Miss Russell portrays the attractive wife of Ameche, who is a college professor. Scientifically opposed to jealousy, he writes a book to support his theory and it is bought by Heflin, playing a New York publisher, with Miss Francis as his aide. To shatter her author-husband's scorn of jealousy, the wife accepts the attentions of the playboy publisher. His assistant, deeply in love with him, retaliates by devoting herself to Ameche.

That four-angled situation launches the principals into a comedy of marital jealousy. Literary teas, a "come-as-you-are" party and a four-way battle are among the highlights. Van Dyke used more than 500 players for the scenes. The costumes worn by Miss Russell and Miss Francis were designed by Adrian to set the pace of 1941-42.

The picture is based upon an original screen play by George Oppenheimer, Edmund L. Hartman and Ogden Nash. The locales range from fresh water college to New York, ending up at an island cottage.

"I Can't Count the Ways Retonga Helped Me"

"It's The Best Medicine I Ever Saw," Declares Well Known Farm Owner, Eats Anything Now and Feels Like Different Man.

"It's a pity every suffering man and woman of this section doesn't know about Retonga," declares Mr. C. S. Stillwell, well known farm owner, World War Veteran and good neighbor, residing on Route 2, Huntersville, N. C., who gives Retonga full credit for relieving his years of distress from poor appetite, undernourishment, nervous sleeplessness, rundown feeling, and similar harassing symptoms due to insufficient flow of stomach digestive juices, sluggish bowel movement and need of Vitamin B-1, for digestion, nerves and strength. Continuing his heartfelt praise of Retonga, Mr. Stillwell declares:

three or four days without bowel movement. My nerves were on edge and I would often be so restless sound sleep was impossible. "The relief Retonga gave me is wonderful, and I haven't felt so good in ten years. I can't count the many pleasant ways Retonga relieved me. It is the best medicine I ever saw."
