BRITAIN ENDING BREAD CONTROL
London, July 21. — Britain demonstrated her faith in a good wheat year today by ending the rationing of bread and flour.
The announcement, effective Sunday, came just two years to the day after bread—unrationed throughout the war—went under restriction following the disastrous winter of 1945-1946.
Most staple foods continue to be rationed — including butter, meat, eggs and milk—and Food Minister John Strachey underlined again today that margins still are slim. His ministry reduced the milk ration for non-priority consumers, the majority of adults, from three pints a week to two and a half.

Future Brighter For Dairy Men
"A strong incentive exists for North Carolina farmers to build up their dairy herds," declared Paul H. Shoaf of Coble Dairy Products, Inc., today.
"We anticipate reduced costs in dairy production and we certainly are looking forward to a period of the greatest demand in history to create a stable market for milk and milk products."
"One of the impediments to increasing milk production has been high feed prices in the last year," declared Mr. Shoaf. "The recent easing of grain prices has been of some help to the dairyman, and we expect further reductions in feed costs after the harvest season this summer."
"A very important factor is the likelihood that exports of American grain will be much lighter next year because of the increased yields in the grain-growing countries of Europe."
"The U. S. Department of Agriculture," he pointed out, "has reported that Russia, Australia and Argentina will again have large exportable supplies of grain this year. The European countries have had a particularly good year for crops and will come closer to meeting their own grain needs."
"What this all sums up to is the fact that we will undoubtedly have grain supplies and prices in this country that will make the milk feed price ratio even more favorable," Shoaf said.
"The human population is gaining faster than our cow population in this country and it will be necessary for us to build up our dairy herds to wartime levels to fill the demands of our larger population."
"Other factors which have increased the demand for dairy products are probably not so generally known by the consumers. The technological advances made during wartime improved many of the products and sharply increased demand. Wartime eating habits, particularly the ice cream habit developed by those in the armed forces, during the war, have been reflected in increased consumer consumption."
"Research has produced many important uses for milk in human and animal foods that will absorb millions of pounds a year above consumption levels."
"The demand picture in dairying has never been better. The future of dairying has never been more optimistic, and still we are faced with one of the worst potential shortages that we have seen. We hope that the liquidation of dairy herds will stop. We urge that heifer calves be kept to build bigger and better herds. We hope that the farm youths who have a background of rural living and who know dairying will take it up as a life's vocation."
"We believe that dairying is a very dependable business, and we see no surplus production in the dairying business for years to come," Mr. Shoaf concluded.

Two out-of-town guests, Miss Jeanie Ogilvie, of Lookout Mountain, Tenn., and Mrs. J. Elliott Deans, of Houston, Texas, were remembered with gifts.
