

Women In The Church

By MARY FOWLER

"Grapes-of-Wrath" conditions are today setting in among migrant farm workers in Arizona, California, southern Texas, and Florida, and will continue until the next harvest, according to Miss Edith Lowry, secretary of the Home Missions Council of North America, who adds up various information received from missionaries and social workers scattered over the nation. The increase in general unemployment in the U. S., says Miss Lowry, makes more difficult the job-hunting problems of the more than 2,500,000 seasonal farm laborers — men, women, and children who have been without work, or incomes, often without homes during the past winter. She urges local communities near which these "farm workers necessary to the national economy" live, and the states which house them, to welcome them to their communities and extend to them the advantages of church, school, and social and economic life.

In 1946, the Young Women's Christian Association founded the School of Social Work in Delhi, India. At the commencement this year, twenty-five young Indian men and women will receive Master's degrees in social work, at the end of two-year courses. These are the first such degrees to be awarded in all Asia. The School is now affiliated with the University of Delhi. The principal is Miss Dorothy Moses, an Indian Christian, educated in India, the U. S. A., and Great Britain. It aims to give young people of "dedicated purpose" training which will "help them meet the welfare needs of the new Asia."

"Our Town," the project of one of my tenth grade classes," writes Miss Mary Ellen Vines, Presbyterian missionary in Kanazawa, Japan, "has just had an election. The highlights were the campaign speeches. Most of them began, 'I am a very fool, but if you will elect me city councilman (or mayor, or assistant mayor) I will make Our Town a beautiful, clean Christian city.' Out of our shabby classroom with one window which can't be shut, and a stove with so many little holes in the side that we can check up on the fire without raising the top, come many wonderful ideas for civic improvement."

"Church Sunday," he asserted, "is not our purpose to use the church as a means for promoting interest in 4-H Club work, but rather to help every 4-H Club boy and girl to seek out the truths of life, to cooperate in the program of the church, and to help broaden the influence of the Christian church in the community."

4-H Church Sunday - Observed In Wilkes

North Carolina's more than 123,000 4-H Club members used the theme "For a Better Rural Community" in their annual observance of 4-H Church Sunday on May 14, according to L. R. Harrill, 4-H leader for the State College Extension Service.

A suggested program outline prepared by the Rev. Garland Hendrix, pastor of Olive Chapel Baptist Church of Wake County, was used by many of the clubs. This included special music, Scripture reading and prayer by 4-H members, and a talk by the pastor or four five-minute talks by club members on the factors which make a better community.

In many churches, 4-H boys and girls assisted with the program by serving as ushers or song leaders, decorating the auditorium with flowers, reciting poems, taking up the offering, or welcoming members of the congregation. The club members dressed in uniform and sat in a body at many of the services.

Harrill said 4-H Church Sunday was observed throughout the nation to emphasize the meaning of Christianity in rural life. The program is designed, he said, to re-emphasize the importance of spiritual growth and development in the life of the individual, the community, the state, and the world, and to keep alive the interest of rural youth in the program of the church.
