FATTENING HOGS.

The length of time required for fattening is to be completed; over gorging is medy for this is abstinence. It is essential that pigs be fed at regular intervals Any animal fed regularly thrives better than those fed at irregular intervals, and where the diet is varied and not adminisied with profitable results. The best peried to commonee futtoning is in the autumn: then almost every kind of food is to be had in plenty, as well as in perfection; the weather is neither too hot ner too cold; and the humidity generally prevalent at this season nets beneficially upon the skin and tissues, and as it were In reates the whole animal economy .-Besides, they are ready to be slaughtered at the period when this can be done with most advantage, when the lowness of the temperature allows more time and cousequently enables the owner to turn the flesh to the greatest advantage; whereas in warm weather the ment must be salted or pickled, eaten or disposed of immediately, or it turns off and is spoiled. The best kinds of food for fattening pigs are pasturage on clover or lucerne, or a run in the cornfield immediately after the crop has been taken in. Milk or whey mixed with corn, oat, barley or pea-meal, alone, or in connection with each other or soup and either alone or mixed with potatoes or meal.
