Mr. Clay's Speech to the Ladies .- Ou Miladelphia correspondent briefly noticed esterday Mr. Clay's interview with the alies of that city, at least ten thousand whom shook hands with him, whilst pany kissed him and others presented him with valuable presents and momentoes. the North American gives the following rief sketch of the speech he made to the dies on that occasion .- Bal. Sun.

He said he was unprepared to make a seech such as the occasion required, and would content himself with saving a few words to the ladies of Philadelphia, where e reception he had met had been so varm, so kind and hospitable that he hold never find language to express his eartfelt gratitude his profound acknowdgments. It was a period of forty-one ears that he had been visiting Philadelhia. During the many visits which he ad made in the course of that time, his eception had always been gratifying .-

e had never visited Philadelphia but th pleasure; he had never left it but with regret. All his receptions had been ospitable, but none so hospitable, so enagainstic, so glorious as the present. He egged them to convey to their fathers. o their brothers, and to their busbands, is sincere thanks and lasting gratitude. The constitution and laws of society ad drawn marked lines of distinction beween the sphere of action of the two exes. Women were not permitted to frament. To men belonged the sterner dulles of life-the cultivation of the earth -the prosecution of war, when the caamity of war unhappily afflicted the counhe Nation. To women belonged the domestic duties. It was their duty to rear the young -to instil into their infant minds winciples of morality and religion, and telings of patriotism, and above all, to pepare the children of the country for ture usefulness and honor. Women should have no regrets for this tolusion from the duties assigned by solety to men. If they knew their labors, her cares and their responsibilities, they wild have no wish to participate in them. otwithstanding the seeming separation " the duties of the two sexes, there was separation in reality. CONNECTING RAILROAD.

The people of Guilford and the surrounding counties ought not to forget the general meeting proposed to be held at Salisbury, on the 6th of June, to take preparatory steps for securing a charter for a road from Danville to Charlotte, and to consider and discuss the means of improvement in our State generally. Recollect, that after the road from Richmond to Danville, and from Columbia to Charlotte, both now under survey, shall be completed, the connecting link through North Carolina will alone be wanting to connect Portland and Maine with the Mississippi at Memphis! The value of the stock will inevitably carry this Road through. And while it will be in itself valuable to the stockholders, and to the great travelling community, our people ought in due time to turn their attention to the best means of making it thoroughly available to the

MESSRS. EDITORS: Whenever men are heard boasting of their patriotism, their love for the liberties and welfare of the human family, and at the same time advocating and carrying out principles in direct opposition to their professions, all sensible persons will regard them as ignorant in the extreme, or wilful demagogues, in search | Court of Pleas and Quarter Sessions-Februof the loaves and fishes of office. I say, sirs, when we see men aspiring after political distinction, thus acting, their inconsistency is readily accounted for. But who can account for the man, professing to be the disciple of the meek and lowly Saviour, who, when upon earth, went about doing good; and who taught by his example and the plainest commands, that they were to follow in his feotsteps, not only in doing good, but in refraining from any thing that might cause the humblest enquirer after truth to be offended; teaching them, that while offences should come, wo unto that man by whom they come, I repeat, sirs, when men professing to follow him, to be governed by, and receive his Word as the man of his counsel, and at the same time engaged in a trafic, of which, even the good man of the world would be ashamed, (the buying and selling of Ardent Spirits) they must be regarded as blinded by the god of this world, and led captive at his will. Whatever may be their professions -however long their prayers-however zealous in the cause, they are mistaken in the whole matter: God declares they are none of his. No man can serve two masters; and if men are so strongly attached to the wealth of the world, as to disregard the evils and miseries with which they are cursing the human family, by traficing siderably modified by the United States; in whiskey, and opposing by their example and influence, the great Temperance Reformation, they should cease to call themselves the disciples of the Lord our God.
