THE LIGHT HOUSE.

The scene was more beautiful far to the eye Than if day in its pride had arrayed it ; The land-breeze blew mild, and the azare arch'd sky Look'd pure as the spirit that made it. The murmur rose soft, as I silently gaz'd On the shadowy wave's playful motion, From the dim distant hill, till the beacon fire blaz'd, Like a star in the midst of the ocean.

No longer the joy of the sailor boy's breast Was heard in his wildly breath'd numbers, The sea-bird had flown to her wave-girdled nest, The fisherman sank to his slumbers. One moment I look'd from the hill's gentle slope, All hush'd was the billow's commotion. And tho't that the light-house look'd lovely as hope, The star on life's tremulous ocean.

The time is long past, and the scene is afar, Yet, when my head rests on its pillow, Will memory sometimes rekindle the star That blazed on the breast of the billow. In life's closing hour, when the trembling soul flies. And death stills the heart's last emotion, O then may the seraph of mercy arise ! Like a star on eternity's ocean.

THE BULL AND THE ANACONDA.

We find in one of the English magazines an account, by a British officer, of an encounter between a wild bull and the immense serpent called the Anaconda, of which the writer says he was an eye witness, in the Island of Ceylon. After a long detail of the first interview between the two animals, the writer informs us that the bull, thinking the snake an ugly customer, cantered off and left him-trampling down the scattered fallen branches with a tremendous crash. But ou a sudden, a still loud. er and rattling rush was heard among the palms, and with a single spring the snake dart. ed down like a thunder clap, and twisted her. self with her whole body round the devoted bull. Before the animal was yet aware of his dan. ger, he already felt his delay inclosed between the wide expanded jaws of the monster, and her teeth stuck into it deeply. Roaring aloud he endeavored to flee, and succeeded in dragging his tormentor a few yards with him ; but instantly she coiled herself round him in three or four wide folds, and drew these knots so close together, that the entangled beast was incapable of moving, and remained as if rooted to the place, already struggling with the terrors and pangs of death. The noise of this ex.

Unequal was the strife, still it was not over instantly. The noble beast wanted no spirit to defend himself, nor was his strength easily exhausted. Now he rolled himself on the with his weight; now he swelled every nerve and exerted the power of every muscle to burst the fetters in which his limbs were enveloped ; he shook himself violently; he stamped, he bit, he roared, he pawed up the earth, he foamed at the mouth, and then dashed himself on the ground again with convulsive struggles. But every moment the Anaconda's teeth imprinted on his flesh new wounds; with every moment she drew her folds tighter and tighter; till after struggling for a full quarter of an hour, I at length saw the poor animal stretched out at full rength and breathless, totally deprived of motion and of life.

Now then I expected to see the Anaconda gratify the hunger by which she had been so long tormented; but I was ignorant that it is not the custom of this animal to divide its prey, but to swallow it in one enormous morsel. The size of the murdered bull made this impossible without much preparation; and I now learned from the 'snake's proceedings the necessity in which there was for her always remaining in the neighborhood of some large tree.

She again seized the bull with her teeth and dragged to the foot of the palm. Here she endeavored to place it upright leaning against the trunk. Having effected this she enveloped the tree and the carcass together in one great fold. and continued to draw this closer, till she had broken every individual bone in her victim's reduced it into a shapeless mass of flesh.

In due time the Anaconda had fully prepartire carcass with her slime. The act of swallowing, however, was not accomplished without violent efforts : a full hour elapsed, before she had quite finished her dreadful meal; at length the carcass was entirely swallowed, and she stretched herself out at full length in the grass, with her stomach distended to the most astonishing dimensions. Every trace of her former liveliness and activity had disappeared. Her immoderate appetite had now yielded her op impotent and defenceless, a prey even to the least formidable foe. I did not hesitate, therefore, to discharge my musket at the monster at a moderate distance. The ball struck her close by her eve. She felt herself wounded; her body swelled with spite and venom, and every stripe of her variegated skin shone with more brilliant and vivid colors. But as to avenging herself upon her assailant, of that she was not totally incapable. She made one vain attempt to regain her old retreat among the boughs of the palm-trees, but sank down again upon the grass motionless and helpless. The report of my musket was the signal agreed up-

Indeed in many circles it seems to be entirely conceded that there is in the Churches not only a Plumes, Swords, marble coldness, but a deadly poison. A writer in the Maryland Herald has collected all the notices taken of the cause of Temperance in the annual reports of the General Assembly, since 1832, and we confess ourselves Double and single barrel Shot Guns surprised to find so much said in favor of this cause, and so little from year to year to its disparagement. And we venture to say that there can scarcely be found a member of that Church, under 25 or over 40, who is engaged in the traffic. The fact is that the moral sense of the community holds it disreputable, and the man to be abandoned who in this day will undertake for profit to enter upon this business.

THRILLING INCIDENT .- At a Temperance meeting in Philadelphia, some years ago, a learned clergyman spoke in favor of wine as a drink : demonstrating it, quite to his own satisfaction, to be Scriptural, gentlemanly, and healthful. When he sat down, a plain, elderly man rose, and asked leave to say a few words. "A young friend of mine," said he, " who had long been very intemperate, was at length prevailed on, to the great 10v of his friends, to take the pledge of entire abstinence from all that could intoxicate. He kept the pledge faithfully for some time, struggling with his habit f-arfully; till 'one Repairing done on very short notice, Work done evening, in a social party, glasses of wine were handed around. They came to a clergyman present who took a glass, saying a few words in vindication of the practice. "Well!" thought the young man, "if a young clergyman can take wine, and justify it so well, why not I?" So he took a glass. It instantly rekindled his fiery and slumbering appetite, and after a rapid downward course, he died of delirium tremens-died a raving madman."
