Poetical.
WHOM, NOT HAVING SEEN, WE LOVE.

It is easy to love when eyes meet eyes, And the pleasure resembles love.

When the heart goes up to the gaze of heaven, And the spirit breathes of jubilee.

When the heart goes up to the gaze of heaven, And the spirit breathes of jubilee.

When the heart goes up to the gaze of heaven, And the spirit breathes of jubilee.

From the Greenbacker's Point.
JOHN A. GILMER.

Come one and all, on Whigs I call, Attend without a moment's delay.

He is the man who will stand firm, Who to the South's cause is true.

This man was born to lead the storm, Whom thousands now the Union love.

See what he does—what laurels won, Whom he will wear his crown.

Let those who will divide him still, Whom he will wear his crown.

Let those who will divide him still, Whom he will wear his crown.

Let those who will divide him still, Whom he will wear his crown.

Let those who will divide him still, Whom he will wear his crown.

Let those who will divide him still, Whom he will wear his crown.

Let those who will divide him still, Whom he will wear his crown.

Let those who will divide him still, Whom he will wear his crown.

Let those who will divide him still, Whom he will wear his crown.
