Intelligence from the principal cotton-growing counties in Texas represent the crop as having been greatly damaged by drought.

It happened, last summer, that a gay party of young people were spending a few weeks at the farm, seeking that enjoyment which in summer the city cannot afford.

On the morning after their arrival, as we took our places in the breakfast room Uncle Richard made known the rule by which he conducted his family devotion.

"A stitch in time saves nine. Selah." It is needless to say the solemnity of the occasion was broken up and roars of laughter pealed through the quiet morning air.

During the remainder of her visit Kate never failed to repeat a verse which she had committed to memory; and when she returned to the city, as she bade adieu to Uncle Richard, she said, "I shall profit by the lesson I have learned under your instruction."

Some very capital sulphur springs occur on the land of Mr. Benjamin Deckerworth, on the Anderson and Greenville road, 8 miles from Anderson C. H., and 10 from Williamston.

A sulphuretted hydrogen-bearing chalybeate spring occurs also near the mill on Judge Whitner's place, four miles south of the Court-house.

The Vigilance Committee of this city have had reason to suppose within the past two or three days that a planter of North Carolina had reached this city in pursuit of a fugitive slave who left for the North one day quite suddenly about a year since.

The king's father, instead of being angry, as we should have expected, at his officer for what might have appeared to him to be an untimely act, made this world-renowned remark: "Happy is the king who has a son willing to obey, and a judge willing to enforce the laws."

Old toppers may get a hint towards relief in the following passage of an address by Professor Miller to the Scottish clergy: "Every drop of alcohol went to the brain, hardened it, and produced a detrimen-tion of blood thither."

It does not necessarily follow that a man is a Christian because he belongs to a church, any more than it follows that a man is a dog because his name is Barker.

Declaration, With list of Members, Church officers, Building Committee, Builders, United States Officers, Officers of the State of N. C. and City of Wilmington and squires of United States Coats.

From the American Mercury. THE YOUNG PRINCE. Many years ago there lived in England a very wicked prince, a king's son named Henry.

The good judge read them a lecture on their wicked course, and then sent all the prince's companions to prison. He was about to free Henry, when that young man, thinking he was insulted by the sentence his comrades had received, and using many harsh words, dealt the judge a blow on the face.

The king's father, instead of being angry, as we should have expected, at his officer for what might have appeared to him to be an untimely act, made this world-renowned remark: "Happy is the king who has a son willing to obey, and a judge willing to enforce the laws."

Every drop of alcohol went to the brain, hardened it, and produced a detrimen-tion of blood thither. He had read in books of travel that some of the tribes of the North American Indians were well aware of this, for when they failed in procuring a supply of alcohol, they were wont to stand for some time on the crown of their heads.
