MISCELLANEOUS.

DEAN HENRY. I have received your letter of December 31, giving an account of the high tide last year, and of the breaking away of the dyke. I regret the occurrence; but it is to be considered for the best, as it has exposed the necessity of a more permanent and solid structure. It has also shown the necessity of a more permanent and solid structure. It has also shown the necessity of a more permanent and solid structure.

A LETTER OF DANIEL WEBSTER.

How characteristic is the following letter of Mr. Webster! How full of wisdom were even his most playful effusions! Imbued with noble and lofty sentiments, he could write nothing without being instructive.

Washington, Jan. 3, 1855.
Dear Henry: I have received your letter of December 31, giving an account of the high tide last year, and of the breaking away of the dyke. I regret the occurrence; but it is to be considered for the best, as it has exposed the necessity of a more permanent and solid structure. It has also shown the necessity of a more permanent and solid structure.
