BUNCOMBE AND YANCY ALL HAIL!

A correspondent of the Spirit of the Age, writing from Swannano, says:

"Buncombe has furnished four Colonels, Clingman, Lee, Z. B. and R. B. Vance, and between eleven and twelve hundred men and boys; for boys only fourteen or fifteen years old have run away from their parents and entered the ranks like men.—Yancy county has scarcely enough men left to gather the present crop of corn. A volunteer from that county told me a few days ago, that in his neighborhood there was not enough left to make a log heap or raise a cabin; out of forty-three on the muster roll, forty had volunteered. Nearly half the Yancy volunteers left wives and children behind."

The same writer, alluding to the sufferings of some of our troops, presents the following extract from a letter from one of Col. Lee's Regiment in Northwestern Virginia:

"I am sitting on a rock by a log fire.—It is dark and foggy and pretty cold, and I am barefoot. I have walked my shoes entirely off; my socks are in strings, and the next time you hear from me, I may be off at the knees. I have been living, eating and sleeping, most of the time for three weeks, with nothing for a shelter save the broad arch of Heaven, which has proved to be a bad cover from the storms that has pelted us poor soldiers as though we were beasts of the forest. Notwithstanding the hardships and privations we have to endure, we bear it all without a word, willing to serve our country in any capacity best to her welfare. We are still zealous in the cause of liberty; willing to sacrifice friends and property, yea, even our lives, in trying to rid our country of the demons that infest it."

Notwithstanding there has been such an outpouring of volunteers from the mountains, and such a quantity of clothing given by the ladies as has been given, there are some tories in the same region, and some that wish to fight for plunder. Some that cried loudest for the war in the beginning, were only desirous for an opportunity to fill their pockets, while others cried against resistance for fear of losing what they already had. A poor volunteer who has a small family, went to a merchant who seemed very patriotic a few months ago, for a small quantity of leather to shoe his wife and children, and the merchant would not divide the sides from fear of injuring the sale of the other parts. It was a little thing, but little things show the man the plainest. All such men, and all speculators at such times as these, ought to pull hemp side by side with the tory that takes up arms against his country.

DOMESTIC SALT.

We have seen a small sample of Salt made near Wilmington, part of a supply received here for sale at the moderate price of six dollars a bushel. It is beautifully white, had been ground like the Liverpool salt, and appears in all respects, except price, to be the right thing. We learn that the coast is lined with salt-boilers; and many more would be glad to go into the business if they could get the pans for evaporation. The foundry of Messrs. Ander on & Cord, in this town, has been thronged with applicants and orders, and the proprietors have offered a high premium for preference in the supply of pans made at their establishment.

The determination of the State to go into the business, with a capital of $100,000 devoted to it, and to sell at cost, will soon bring down the price and make an ample supply,—supposing that the business be placed in proper hands, as we hope it will be, and not be used merely to give a place and salary to some broken down political hack. It is unfortunate that the Legislature did not pass the similar bill of Mr. Wright, of this county, at its session last Summer, which might have gotten the works in full operation weeks ago, and saved thousands of dollars to the consumers, and a large amount of character to the speculators. Very few persons, however, at that time imagined that salt would be so scarce as to sell at $15 to $20a sack.

P. S. We rejoice to see that Dr. Worth, a gentleman of capacity, energy, and integrity, (who does not belie his name,) has been selected to manage this important business.—Fay. Observer.

Yankee Malignity.—We have a new evidence of the maligunity of our late brethren, who are endeavoring to make us love them by robbing and burning our property and by murdering our people, in the attempt to block up the inlets which God has made to our ports, by sinking old hulks loaded with stone in their channels, and with the avowed purpose of never allowing at least one of them to be re-opened. This is a kind of warfare not resorted to, so far as we know, by any civilized nation. It is dastardly, and well nigh impious—an attempt to counteract the great purposes of Providence, in opening harbors for commerce, made by a nation professing to be overwhelmingly strong, against a feeble band of rebels, as they call the South. The act will bring down upon them the scorn of all really great nations, and we may hope that it will be frowned upon and circumvented by the Great Architect of the Universe.—Fay. Observer.

DEAD SOLDIERS

Living in a city, one becomes familiarized to funeral processions—from the long line of carriages dragging its slow length along, and following some rich man to the grave, to the small band of mourners accompanying the humble and lowly; and one looks on the most ostentatious of these exhibitions as a nine days wonder, which is forgotten as soon as it passes out of sight. But we confess to emotions of a very different nature, when we see the remains of the poor soldiers borne daily through the streets, in plain furniture wagons, and without a solitary attendant. As often as the spectacle presents itself to us—which is frequently half a dozen times a day—we involuntarily heave a sigh at the untimely fate of the poor fellow who died far away from home, with his last moment, not even cheered by the presence of a mother, or a sister. He left his fireside in blooming health, and the possession of manly vigor; and he is carried back a lifeless corpse!—What amount of privation and suffering has he undergone! Surely, our gratitude is due to all those brave men, who have taken up arms in defence of their country: and it is as little as we can do to furnish them with every appliance that may contribute to their health and comfort. Gentle reader, whoever you be, remember the poor soldiers.—Pet. Express.

☞ We understand that in a dead calm, the other day, the pickets at Evansport opened conversation with those across the river, during which the Sickle's party told ours that their brigade would winter in Fredricksburg. In reply our pickets requested the Yankees to bring Mrs. S. with them, whereupon the Yankees became furious, cursed outrageously, and the talk was broken off.

An Item Worth Noticing.—A friend of sound practical sense and experience suggests, that to guard against many diseases incident to camp life, volunteers should put a small quantity of tar—say a large spoonful in their canteens. It has often been recommended as a preventive of chills and fevers, measles, etc., by physicians. The writer of this used it much, long ago, and after a day or two it detracts nothing from the taste of water. Try it.
