Recollections of the War:
How the Officers of a Company Became Disgusted With Colours.
BY SIGMA.

Every one who served in the army during the "late unpleasantness" is aware how exceedingly difficult it was to procure vegetables of any kind, and how very fond of them every one became as soon as they were secured to be had. The cubic inch of fat pork flung to each as his daily ration of meat was carefully saved from day to day until some member of the mess was fortunate enough to procure a few heads of 'greens' or a half-fall of little, hard, spinning turnips. And then what preparations for the long delayed and hungrily anticipated feast! The buttered and disased camp-kettle was joyfully brought forth from its retirement in the wagon and carefully scoured with water from the nearest ditch or puddle. Every collard leaf was carefully examined, with eager eyes and busy fingers, that no lurking green worm might, by any accident, become incorporated with the savory mess. The little squares of pork were dug out from the meaty depths of the greasy haversacks and the skin sides scraped to free them from the litch and grime accumulated in the long transit to the army in rail-car and army wagon. How their hungry eyes would sparkle and dance as the little specks of grease, like birds eyes, began to rise to the surface of the gradually heating water, and how eagerly they would snuff up the steam, as the pot began to boil, and cast up this little white cube to the surface, to be again swallowed up as they rolled over toward the centre of the kettle. Then the greens were placed in the boiling water, every fragment of a leaf was carefully skimmed up in the hand and thrown into the boiling pot, and mashed down with a stick or bayonet until there was only room for the dumplings, whose wonderful lumps of boiled corn meal dear to the palate of every true Tarheel.

During the time occupied in cooking, each one was busily employed in manufacturing a fork from anything that came handiest, from a fence rail to a small sapling, and when it was declared "done" and the kettle taken from the fire and placed on some convenient spot on the ground, where they could all easily assemble around it, how ravenously they fell to and attacked it with their improvised forks, but scarcely ever until their favorite officers had been courteously and cordially invited to partake of the rare delicacy.

Loyal and true to his country and her cause, no man knew better than the Tarheel soldier how to resent an injury, fancied or real, or to return a kindness. At all times respectful and obedient to his superior officer, yet he never, at any time, let an opportunity pass of showing to such as had treated him unkindly or harshly that he remembered the hurt and cherished it. No nobler, braver, or more self-sacrificing set of men ever lived on the earth than the private soldiers in the late Confederate army, and among them stood pre-eminent, in rag and dirt, unshaven and unbrushed, bayonetted and grasping his trusty rifle, the Tarheel. I knew them at home, where they left their wives and a little ones unprotected and unprovided for, toiling almost day and night for a scanty subsistence on the coarsest fare, and I knew them in battle, where they became transformed from mere ordinary mortals and became men of iron and steel, as irresistible in the charge as the thunder-bolt from heaven.

TARHEEL. There is no reproach in the name; it has become the synonym for Loyalty, Fortitude and Bravery. History has not withheld her tribute to his prowess, nor failed to record the story of his deeds. Ah well! Revenus a nos mortuus, as the French say. I was never being led away from the aim and object I had in view at the outset, by what they very properly term l'esprit du corps. Paradox the digestion and let us hurry on to the end.

During Foster's raid from New Bern, early in the war, although there was no scarcity of provisions in which to cook and eat. We were marched and counter-marched day and night, through sun and rain, wind and storm, hail and snow, and no purpose, so far as any of us could discern, beyond frightening all the old women into the idea that there was going to be something done and somebody was going to get hurt, for when we were marching in one direction on one road in search of Foster, he was sure to be marching on another road and in a contrary direction. This state of affairs lasted for several days until Carboro' Southerner.

It is all past now and those of us whom disease and the bullet have spared are doing the worse for having eaten a mess of greens, seasoned with a dirty shirt and thickened with "confederates," but I will venture to say that none of us ever eat better than the same relish now that we did then. Sic transit gloria mundi.

State vs. James, from New Haven.
Judgment reversed.
The defendant was indicted and tried at Superior Court Oct 1878. New Haven Criminal Court. Judgment and battery upon one L. V. Smith. The jury found the following facts in a special verdict: That the defendant made the affidavit on which Smith was arrested, charging him with being the same person who had committed a murder in South Carolina; that he went with the officer to whom the warrant was issued for the purpose of identifying the person described; that the person arrested was the person intended to be arrested by the defendant, but not the man who actually committed the murder in South Carolina.

On this special verdict the Court adjourned the defendant guilty, and ordered him to pay a fine of one hundred dollars and the costs of the prosecution; and the defendant appealed.

Held, The guilty or innocence of a party charged with crime, or the facts evidence on which the procept for his arrest was based, cannot impair the authority which the procept conveys to make the arrest. And the protection which it affords is not restricted to the officer to whom it is directed, but equally extends to all who may aid him in its execution. If a warrant issues from competent authority, the justification is full to the officer and all who cooperate with him, and no enquiry is admissible into the circumstances under which it was issued. Obedience to the command of a lawful procept cannot itself be an offence. Whatever redress the prosecutor may have against defendant for malicious prosecution, or whatever punishment may be inflicted for his false evidence cannot impair the protection afforded by the warrant to those who executed it.

Dixon vs. Commissioners of Beaufort, from Beaufort. Judgment affirmed.

The plaintiff, who had been elected sheriff of Beaufort county, appeared before the defendant, commissioners at their meeting on the 25th day of December following, and tendered the procept bond in full, and with sufficient sureties, as required by law, but refused to give the prescribed bonds for the collection of taxes. He insisted upon his rights to be inducted into the office of sheriff, exempt from any obligation in respect to the public taxes. The board denied the application, and demanded his execution of all the bonds as a condition of his admission to office. His Honor being of the opinion, gave judgment accordingly, and the plaintiff appealed.

Held, To entitle a sheriff to be inducted into office, it is essentially necessary that three several bonds must be executed by him and approved by the county commissioners. Battle's Reversal, chapter 106, section 8, and chapter 27, section 8 (3).

Held, also, The county commissioners have the power to require that the penal sums in such bonds shall exceed $10,000 when necessary for the public interests. Acts of Dec. 9, 1862 and 1868-'69, chapter 1 and 245. Sykes vs. Commissioners of Bladen, modified, 72 N. C. Reports, 34.

DILLARD, J.:
Kercher vs. Fairly, from Richmond. Judgment affirmed.

The plaintiff in this case is mortgagee of lands conveyed to secure certain notes, and brings this action to foreclose the mortgages. The defence is based upon the ground that the notes secured had been paid in whole or in part, or that the plaintiff, as administrator of the principal obligor, had or ought to have, assets in his hands sufficient to pay off the entire debt. Pending the suit, the plaintiff on notice moved for the appointment of a receiver, on the allegation that the property was inadequate security, and that E. N. Fairly, one of the mortgagors, was receiving the profits and was insolvent, whereby he was in danger of irreparable loss as to the rents and profits. The receiver was appointed and the defendants appealed.

Held, A mortgagee, after day of default, is entitled to enter into possession of the mortgaged premises, and take and apply the rents and profits and to apply the same in liquidation of the debts. His right to do so is incident to his legal estate and is a part of his security.

Held, An issue being raised, proper to be tried before a decree of foreclosure is made, a receiver should be appointed pending the litigation, and the rents and profits ought to be secured as a fund to be applied at the final hearing in the plaintiff's debt, if need be, to satisfy the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged premises.

Tow vs. Two, from Sampson.
Judgment affirmed.

The husband in this case sought a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, and put his case on the ground of a separation from his wife, and alleged adultery of the wife before and after the separation. The jury found that the wife did not separate from the husband, but the husband separated from his wife; that the wife was not guilty of adultery prior to the separation, and was guilty after the separation. Upon this verdict His Honor held that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree of divorce.

Held, Marriage is a contract, concluded on the application of the married party for the cause of adultery, in two cases. 1st. If either party shall separate from the other and live in adultery. 2. If the wife shall commit adultery. Battle's Reversal, chap. 37, sec. 4.

To entitle the husband to a divorce in the first case, two things must concur—separation by the wife without default of the husband, and a living in adultery by the wife. The husband cannot have the benefit of matrimony dissolved by reason of the adultery of his wife committed through his allowance, his exposure of her to lewd company, or bright about by the husband's default in any of the essential duties of married life, or supererogation on his part, without just cause. The party asking divorce must show that he or she did not separate, or if he or she did, that it was unavoidable and made necessary by the conduct of the other party.

Many Facts in Small Compass.
The number of languages spoken is 2,065. The number of men is equal to the number of women. The average human life is about 33 years; one quarter die before the age of 7. To every 1,000 persons one rarely reaches the age of 100 years, and not more than one in 500 will reach the age of 80. There are on earth 1,000,000,000 inhabitants. Of these 38,333,835 die every year, $1,824 die every day, 8,789 every hour and 60 every minute. The losses are balanced by an equal number of births. The married are longer lived than the single ones. Tall men live longer than short ones. Women have more chances of life previous to the age of fifty years, but fewer after, than men. The number of marriages is in proportion as 70 to 100. Marriages are more frequent after the equinox, that is, during the months of June and December. Those born in the spring are more robust than others. Births and deaths are more frequent by night than by day.

Pat Donan on Women.
There was a good audience at Mercantile Library Hall last night to hear Col. P. Donan's famous lecture on "Woman." Among the gentlemen who occupied seats on the platform were Hon. Samuel T. Grover, Col. Don. Morrison, Col. A. W. Slayback, Col. J. T. ... of the National ...

Overtoke was also present and many other distinguished citizens. The audience was certainly a very select one, and Col. Donan has no reason to regret his first appearance on the platform of St. Louis. It would be impossible to describe the lecture. It was one of the most unique things ever listened to, and is destined to give its author high rank among the lecturing fraternity. The speaker was greeted at every step with roars of laughter and thunderous applause. There would be hardly time to laugh, however, before he would say something so touching and so eloquent that one would feel like melting into tears. It was a strange lecture—full of old sayings, startling propositions, wise reflections, stinging criticisms, funny flatness, witty positions, both logical and illogical. Woman was never so discussed and eulogized, and praised and heaped with praise again as she was by Donan.—St. Louis Paper.

"I should think glasses would be good for Major Bruck's eyes," said one friend to another. "Glasses are just what are ruining them," was the reply. "That's queer," said the friend. "Not all," was the rejoinder, "because, you see, he only uses the kind of glasses which are never raised above the nose."

During a dense fog a Mississippi steambot took landing. A traveler anxious to go ahead, came to the landing, and asked why they stopped. "Too much fog, can't see the river." "But you say so the steam coach." "Yes," replied the urban pilot, "but until the bluer busts we ain't going that way." The passenger went to bed.

A Minneapolis man has achieved a written with five heads, and we can imagine how sweet it will be when that cat attains a majority, to have it sit on the back fence and command with itself.
