Tips

If you buy a Christmas tree, be sure it's fresh. Needles should be hard to pull off. The trunk butt should be sticky with resin and when the trunk is bounced on the ground, there should not be a shower of falling needles.

Erect the tree in a sturdy, water-holding stand. And keep the stand filled with water - a tree needs a surprising amount of moisture to avoid drying out. When the needles become brittle and start to fall off, the tree becomes a serious fire hazard and it's time to take it down.

You might want to buy a live tree and then plant it outside after Christmas. To do this successfully, don't keep the tree in a heated room more than three days, and don't try to plant it while the ground is frozen. Check with a nursery for more advice.

Artificial trees may be less flammable than natural trees, but check the label to make sure. And check the label to see if it's been tested by Underwriters Laboratories. Usually you can put lights on plastic trees, but don't ever put electric lights on metallic trees. Metallic trees can become charged with electricity if strung with faulty lights, and anyone touching it could be electrocuted.

Check all holiday lights for broken or cracked sockets, frayed or bare wires and loose connections. Don't use indoor lights outside and vice versa, and be sure that outside lights are firmly anchored to protect them from wind damage. Don't string more than three sets of lights together. Turn off all lights on trees and outside when you go to bed or leave the house.
