WSSU To Get Co-Ed Visitation

More N.C. Workers May Get Jobs Under Emergency Program

A projected total of 4,660 people were scheduled to be employed under the federal Emergency Job Program in North Carolina by March 15, 1975, according to a release from Gov. James E. Holsinger's office.

As of February 18, a total of 2,739 persons were on the job under the federal money contracted through the Office of Manpower Services, making North Carolina one of the leading Southeast states in putting the U.S. Labor Department dollars to work.

The bulk of the jobs provided with the emergency money has been filled by non-skilled workers in construction and maintenance. Other jobs include clerical work, law enforcement, work assistance, educational staffing, health care, firemen and administrative personnel for local governments.

The majority of wage rates fall between $2.25 to $3.00 an hour, with the heaviest concentration of emergency jobs in the industrial Piedmont Crescent.

The latest figures supplied by the Employment Security Commission show an estimated 263,000 North Carolinians out of work, the highest number ever recorded in the

A proposal to permit a form of co-educational visitation on an experimental basis has been accepted by the Student Personnel Division, Administrative Council, Chancellor Kenneth R. Williams and the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees. The decision came in the March 13 monthly meeting of the Board. The experiment is to be conducted during the fall term of the 1975-76 academic year.

However, student body President, W. Ray Williams, who voted against the proposal, stated that the majority of students did not favor the proposal as accepted. "Most students rather have nothing at all than the form that was accepted", he said.

According to the guidelines and recommendations, the visitation program is to be evaluated during and at the end of the trial period by the Director of Student Affairs, Dr. Sylvester Wooten, to determine if it is to be continued. Approval for continuation must be received from the Administrative Council, Chancellor, and Trustees.

Dr. Wooten, Director of Student Affairs, said that he felt some kind of trial period was necessary and if the trial period was successful the program would be extended and then it would become more open.

According to the program guidelines the Dean of Women, Mrs. Ruth Greene will select one dormitory for women in which co-ed
