

Patrol Car Ride Uneventful

by Gwen Dixon
Staff Reporter

Riding in a patrol car can be fun, exciting or uneventful. All Saturday nights are not filled with action. This Saturday-night rider did not witness any shootings, robberies or slight disturbances. It seemed hardly a mouse was stirring in Winston-Salem.

While riding with Lt. Richard Dull (no pun intended), a tinge of excitement did occur when two officers stopped a car bearing a Texas license plate. Three females and one male were traveling in the car and one male was following behind. Lt. Dull drove up and contacted FBI agents in Charlotte. The Charlotte FBI had put out a bulletin on the car Friday night.

Dull, a 28-year veteran of the force, said the FBI agents wanted to know if a Harris was traveling in the car. He said the man had some connection with the Patty Hearst case. There was nobody in the car by that name, so the patrolmen could not detain the occupants.

However, one officer was very suspicious of the car's occupants. He based his suspicion on the fact that when they signaled for the car to pull over, the driver did not road but pulled into a parking lot. The driver did not get out of the car to find out why the officers had stopped him. The officers had to go over to the car. But the police check found them to be in the clear. A police officer can find out within ten seconds whether or not a person is wanted for any crime in the country.

Patrolman Rex Flint covers the East Winston beat. His beat extends to Linville Road. Before going out to Linville Road, the officer stopped at the bus station and forced a middle-aged black man to leave the station where he sat eating prezels. Patrolman Flint said that the man has no place to go because his mother put him out. There seemed to be no justice in forcing a man out into the cold when he has no place to go. But, the man left. As the patrol car left the station he was seen walking with his green differ bag thrown across his back.

Like any other town, Winston-Salem has a duke's mixture of everything, Lt. Dull said. "Vice is more prevalent now," the veteran officer remarked.

Dull, soon to retire, said Saturday nights after the parties are over crimes or passion take place. "There is little the police can do," he said, "because it happens inside the house."

The lieutenant said prostitution is not bad around town, but there are some drug users who have a $100 a day habit. "We have had mass arrest for armed robbery and larceny on car lots," he continued. "But as the problem of unemployment gets worse police will have more arrests for the passing of bad checks, larcenies and robberies."

The two officers are law enforcers and they are obligated to uphold the law. They know what the problems are with many of the people who committ crimes and indeed some situations are heart breaking. But the officers can do nothing to ameliorate conditions. They are only doing a job.

children and four foster children.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Munk live on Hope Valley Road and are the foster parents of a five-year-old black girl. They adopted the child, Melissa, when she was five-months old. "The situation has produced no problems," says Paul Munk. "We adopted her because she needed a home and we could provide her with one." Mrs. Munk is a school teacher and Mr. Munk is an engineer at Bell Telephone.

The brotherhood awards go to Charles Lee who was responsible for rescuing a 73-year-old man from a fire and Dr. H. Rembert Malloy.

Dr. Malloy, educated in the public schools here, has received many scientific honors and holds membership in several professional societies. He is a 1939 graduate of Howard University's Medical School. He has served as attending surgeon at Reynolds and Forsyth Memorial Hospitals and Medical Park Hospital.

The guest speaker is Mrs. Erma Davis, national president of the Council of the Urban League Guild of Peoria, Ill.
