Some People Have Gripes, Some Do Not

by Robert Eller

Staff Reporter

This week's "man in the street" takes a different approach from previous weeks. This week no one was asked a question. Winston-Salem citizens were simply given a chance to speak their piece. Given a chance to air their grievances, some spoke freely while others said they had none.

Hilton Stone, 28, employed by R.J. Reynolds, said, "I see a need for God by the people. As a minister and a Christian I have a responsibility to spread the word of God. The conditions of the world and the economic problems are only things happening that are foretold in the Bible."

Willie Hoover, 48 and disabled, stated that he had no major gripe. "I think Winston-Salem has improved greatly. As far as I'm concerned everything is fine. The Black Panthers re helping the people."

Cathy Roberts, a 21 year-old Winston-Salem State student said, "I have a lot of gripes, and I don't know which one is the biggest. We're spending more money on arms than on the people. The whole economy is bad; people need jobs; I could go on forever."

Paul Leggins, 18 and unemployed, stated, "Nobody wants to get involved. Nobody cares about anybody else.

People need to get together and work collectively to straighten out things."

Ola Mae Creasay, 59, said, "I'm satisfied with the way things are going. I have no gripes."
