Until about 12 weeks ago the Man In The Street's only competition for people's attention on the downtown mall came from an occasional minister who came to the mall to spread the word of the Lord.

But, in the last three months each week the Man In The Street has had to vie for the attention of passersby with the U.S. Labor Party; a group of sign carrying young people who say they have a cureall for the world's problems.

During these last few months, some people have avoided the Man In The Street believing him to be, as one man said, "one of them damn commie traitors."

This week the "Man In The Street" decided to ask citizens in the city their feelings about the U.S. Labor Party. Few people seemed interested in the party and even less knew what the party's platform is. Most people simply said they had rather not be bothered by the young activists.

The first citizens to comment on the party were three Winston-Salem police officers. None of the three showed any malice for the group but all strongly disagreed with their ideas.

Officer D.C. Scales, 26, said, "I feel they're wasting their time. They're doing a great deal of talking about nothing. They seem more interested in starting a disturbance than anything else. Really, I feel its just their way of trying to get attention."

Sylvester Johnson, a 25 year-old laborer said, "From what I've heard their primary purpose is to keep the black man down. I don't really know that much about them. They've never approached me. To that a bystander said, 'he's about the only one they haven't approached.'"

Twenty-one year-old Mark Orlowski stated, "what I think about them is all bad. It's a waste of people's time. I came out to take a walk and get some fresh air and they try to feed me all this propoganda. They're wasting people's time."

Ricky Hairston, 21, said, "I think they should go elsewhere. They aren't doing anything for anybody. They're just trying to sell their newspaper. When they stop me I tell them to get the hell out of my face."

Delores Clark echoed Hairston's feelings, "I think they should just leave me alone. I don't want to be bothered with them. I don't think they stand for anything, they're just trying to make money," she said.

Lester Hauser, 21, stated, "I think they're crazy. We know whats happening. They act as if their paper is a life saver, but all they're really doing is stoping and harassing people."

George Blevens, a Reynolds Tobacco Executive from New York said, "I don't know. Their ideas aren't that much in favor of what we're looking for. My reaction is negative."

Almost all comments received were negative. However, one young man who didn't give his name said, "There's a lot of truth in what they're saying but they mix it with so many lies no one will believe them. They may have good intentions but they approach people the wrong way."

The general opinion formed here was that even with all the problems facing the world today, most people feel the party does not have the cureall they are looking for.
