

Day Camp Program Has Last Meet

The community Day Camp of Winston-Salem, began its final week of activities as campers, counselors, and their parents shared in a worship service at the Dellabrook Presbyterian Church on Sunday August 10, 1975.

During the service participants in the project were awarded certificates. The counselors (10 in number) were also awarded certificates for their participation in the training phase of the program, which prepares them to serve as counselors in the project next year.

The counselors served on a volunteer basis, but applauded during the service, when it was announced that each counselor will be awarded a Twenty-Dollar U.S. Savings Bond.

The program ended on August 15, but plans are already being made to continue the program next summer.

Mobile Tennis unit ends Summer program. Recreation officials say Program was very successful and have plans to continue it next year.

Mobile Tennis Is Big Success In City

The City Recreation Department's experiment in mobile tennis was described this week as "extremely gratifying," and the department is looking forward to it again next summer.

The Pepsi Mobile Tennis program was initiated in mid June and ended last week. It was one of 50 over the country and of two in North Carolina.

Approximately 400 people participated each week at the 20 sites around the city. This was an average of 20 per site, compared with 30 in Raleigh where there were fewer sites.

Pepsi Cola provided the mobile van, complete with tennis balls, rackets, portable nets and even T-shirts. Two instructors were supplied by the City, one by Winston-Salem Tennis, Inc., and there were several volunteers.

John Morris, tennis coordinator for the City, said he was especially delighted with the initial program.

"We accomplished exactly what we wanted," he said, "and that was to give people who wanted to learn something about the game an opportunity to do just that...and to bat the ball around, have some recreation and fun."

Participants ranged in age from five to 15, with some parents joining in.

"I think the program generated lots of enthusiasm and interest in the sport. Only time will tell how much.

"We did learn from experience, however, which sites to go to next year and which times during the day attract the most people," he said.

This summer's program was conducted primarily at recreation centers. There were several sites at housing projects, and one at Children's Home and Parkview Shopping Center. Special sites, where the mobile unit was set up only once, were also used.
