Man In The Street

"No Wheat To The Russians"

The proposed sale of American wheat to the Soviet Union has been a shot item of discussion all over the country during the past week. Recently, longshoremen de-cidied not to load any of the wheat to be exported. This week the "Man In The Street" went to the people of Winston-Salem to find out their feelings in reference to the wheat deal.

The question of whether the U.S. should sell wheat to Russia was asked.

Sharon Hamilton 24, said "No, I think its crazy to sell wheat to any other country as long as there are hungry people here in America," Sharon Hamilton said.

Obie Mastin said, "Hello no! We should be trying to starve them commie's to death. I'd rather see it burned."

Marion Porter answered, "Yes, it will have no effect on the consumer. Here you can increase food production by using more land and tractors. We produce 2.2 billion bussels of wheat and only use .8 billion bussels. We can increase production even more."

Elizabeth Alford said, "No, not unless everybody in this country has enough. I think they're selling the wheat so prices will go higher. I can barely afford to buy food now."

Hubert Allen, 27, said, "No, if we have surplus wheat it should be given to the poor. If the Russians are dangerous enough so we need to keep increasing our defense budget it doesn't make sense to sell them wheat."

Curtis Brown, 42, commented, "I look at it from two standpoints. From the farmers point of view it's to their benefit to sell, but I want to know how it's going to effect the consumer. If it raises prices or causes shortages, it's a bad deal."

Brenda Transou answered, "No, I don't think it's worthwhile. We need to take care of problems here. We can't stamp out hunger and poverty by selling grain to Russia."

From the remarks made by local citizens it appears that most feel that the U.S. should use the wheat to stop hunger here and try to keep inflation down.
