

Mrs. Manderline Scales welcomes participants to seminar on aging. She is project director. The seminars will last through October 25.

Aging Seminars

Stress Productivity

The seminars on aging at WSSU have attracted more than 350 people after two sessions, according to Mrs. Madeline Scales, project director. "The panelist, humanist and consumers have evaluated each session with very good ratings," Mrs. Scales said. "We and very pleased."

The seminars are four weekend free breakfast sessions which are funded by the N.C. Humanities to show aging as a maturing, profitable and productive process said Mrs. Scales, "not to program a person's chronological years," she added.

Each Saturday morning at 8 humanist and panelists and persons from all walks of life gather to exchange professional experiences and knowledge in specific areas. Some concrete activities have already resulted from the valuable exchange of information says Mrs. Scales. "Specifically, some city officials in attendance have agreed to help with needs that come out of the sessions."

These sessions are sponsored by WSSU, Patterson Avenue YWCA, National Council of Negro Women and the N.C. Humanities Commission. Each session with breakfast is free to the public. They continue through October.

Women For Justice Meet

More than 150 members were on hand Saturday (October 12) to hear Mrs. Eve Rogers, Family Court Counselor of Greenville, address the meeting of the Concerned Women for Justice.

More than 24 counties were represented at the meeting and more than 30 were from Winston-Salem. The group meets every second Saturday of the month in Raleigh.

you can," he says, "excel -- be good at whatever you do."

Asked if there is a proportionate number of blacks in city government, he said there is token representation on any level of authority in city government. "I really believe, that there are some blacks who could do more," he said. "But, I don't want to excuse whites either.

He believes that blacks who could do something for black people and those who don't are from the same school of thought. "We must not loose sight of the fact that being black is one thing -- we must share the world with others," he warned, "There are people out here starving."
