Should Saccharin Be Banned?

Should saccharin be banned? Since results of tests conducteds in Canada showed that large doses of the artificial sweetener saccharin caused cancer in rats, the Federal Food and Drug Administration has banned its use.

Americans feel the results of the tests are inconclusive and aer asking that the ban be lifted.

This week the "Man in the Street" asked city residents if they felt saccharin should be banned. Here is how osome of them replied:

Robin Manns answered, "Yes, I think the ban is a good idea. I don't like the taste of artificial sweeteners. Besides, if there is any possibility of it causing cancer it should be banned."

Gregory Williams remarked, "I think the ban should be lifted. Saccharin is helpful to diabetics. Without artificial sweeteners they don't have anything to resort to except sugar and this is hazardous to their health. Saccharin is also of great help to people who must restrict their caloric intake."

Teretha Mickle reasoned, "If there is definite proof that it is a health hazard or that it causes cancer than it should be banned. I don't really know if it is hazardous but I'm going to stop using it. There must be a reason for the ban."

Willie Jones commented, "I think the ban should be lifted. I don't think it's that bad. It's less hazardous than a cigarette. My wife hasn't stopped using it."

Cathy Jones replied, "I think the ban should be lifted. It's been tested in Canada but not here. I don't think it's anymore hazardous than anything else."

Hubert Snell stated, "I think the ban is stupid, I've been using artificial sweeteners and drinking diet drinks for ten years and thats why I weigh 230 instead of 320 now. If the government wants to ban something why not cigarettes or alcohol or something that nobody needs."

Angela Cline said, "The ban should never have been imposed. As much saccharin as they gave those rats they had to die. I'm a diabetic and I have bought a stockpile of saccharin. I plan to continue to use it as long as I can get it."

The majority of persons asked said they felt the saccharin ban should be lifted. The majority of those who use it said they will continue and most had little faith in the tests that resulted in the ban.
