NEWS OF SCIENCE

Electricity
American scientists have developed some interesting ways for the rest of us to get more electricity at a low cost. One of the most spectacular of these is the Liquid Metal Fast Breeder Reactor. Breeder-reactor plants produce electricity and make their own fuel as they consume it—extending our uranium resources so that they can last for hundreds of years. These plants are still in the experimental stage; in fact, it is up to Congress and the Administration how soon we develop them. But once they can be put into commercial use, they could preserve our environment, since they're comparatively non-polluting, and obviously could extend our resources. They will also improve our economy. Economic experts point out that adequate supplies of energy are necessary to decrease inflation trends and to increase employment trends.

"If you would be wealthy think of saving, as well as getting"

Ben Franklin's words are still good advice today. And The Franklin makes the logic behind them possible with their President's Endowment Insurance Plan — a systematic program for accumulating money. It's safe, convenient and it fits easily into your way of life. Not only does this plan provide spendable future income, it also protects your family. If you should die during the premium payment period, all of the premiums you have paid in plus the face amount of the policy would be paid to your beneficiary. We think that's a pretty good deal.
