Anderson has a wide-ranging view of the problems.

"I'm in a classroom all day," he says, "and for the last three years, with the exception of a five percent increase, I've had no raise."

"Today there's little respect for teachers, where there used to be a genuine belief that a child was going to school to learn everything he could," he says. "Nowadays, I'm not sure if that's the prevailing attitude."

He adds: "You must go into the teaching profession with an open eye because you're dealing with two hundred kids a day, with different personalities. The administration may not go along with you and then there are the people who think you've got it made because you have a two-month vacation."

Projecting the future of education, Anderson says he believes the teacher's merit pay scale will be the political football for the next two years. "And I will be right in the middle of it," he says.

He contends he'd rather be behind the scenes getting his hands dirty and remain confident that something is being done.

In spite of the triumphs and the disappointments, Anderson says he still views teaching as "just a job."

"Education is a great challenge," he says. "All of it is for the joy of doing it."
