Coming Soon

The 3D-10 Metropolitan Washington, D.C., Police Boys and right are, kneeling: team manager Bobby Glover, Anthony Girls Club 10-and-under team are 1984 winners of the city Hunt, Anwar McQueen, Eric Alberto, Kristen Noble, Monte championship. They posted a 16-2 record on the season and Marshall, Maurice Hardy and Chris Dudley. Standing from will be playing a group of 10-and-under all-stars from the the left are Assistant Coach LeBarry Williams, Omar Winston-Salem Recreation Leagues in the second annual Williams, Eduardo Carmona, Almandeus Thornton, Alonzo Basketball Shootout between Washington, D.C., and Phillips, Brett Sanders, Raylon Etheridge, Duane Simpkins Winston-Salem on April 6-7 at the Hanes Hosiery Recreation James Freeman and Coach Edward Hill Jr., former Chronicle Center beginning at 6 p.m. each day. Pictured from left to reporter (photo by Brian Branch Price).

Subscribe

722-8624

Georgetown 'defends' its way to title; meanwhile, major baseball quietly begins

From Page B2

The Chronicle, Thursday, April 5, 1984-Page B3

OF THE WEEK

THE Pepsi Cola Bottling Company salutes another top student athlete...Terry Boyd of Parkland is the Pepsi Prep Athlete of the Week. Miss Boyd pitches for the Parkland girls softball team. So far this spring she has helped her team win four of five games.

IN honor of Parkland Senior High School softball player Terry Boyd, The Pepsi Cola Bottling Company of Winston-Salem will make a cash contribution to the school's overall athletic program. Congratulations to Terry Boyd of Parkland, The Pepsi Prep Athlete of the Week.

Listen each Wednesday at 8 p.m. on WSJS for Gene Overby TALKS SPORTS where he highlights Pepsi's Prep Athlete of the Week.

over the graduation rates of all 53 schools that entered to beat out Chicago. the tourney. I have a feeling Georgetown would do pretty well in that competition, too.

Now that Thompson and his crew have brought the national title back to Washington, I wonder if President Reagan will invite them to the White House for a reception.

Don't be surprised if he does. It's an election year, you know.

I could go on, but why beat a dead horse, or horses, as in Houston, Kentucky, etc., etc.? The Hoyas already did that and they did it with defense, not fists and elbows, as so many writers for some reason (you can form your own opinion of what it is) have suggested.

Instead, I'll go on to baseball, where the major league season started this week. And, I'll be short and sweet in giving my picks for the four division titles.

In the American League, look for the same two teams to take their respective divisions again. Baltimore has the best pitching, adequate depth, Eddie Murray, Cal Ripkin Jr., Dan Ford and a fine bunch of platoon players. Detroit will chase the Orioles, as will Toronto and the Yankees, but nobody will catch them.

In the West, the White Sox won by 20 games last year. Somebody should be closer than that after 162 games this year but you can take your pick as to which club it'll be. Maybe the Angels have one more good year left from some of their high-paid vets, but, with their lack of pitching, they'll probably need to score a dozen runs a game

Over in the National League it's a totally different story. Only the Mets are not given a fair shot at winning the East, where I'll have to pick the Pirates. Their pitching is the best right now. But if the Expos can get Steve Rogers healthy, they could win it, though I'm still trying to figure out what they gained by getting rid of Al Oliver and picking up Pete Rose.

Philadelphia also has a good shot if Charlie Hudson continues to improve at the rate he did last season and Steve Carlton has another good year left in him.

St. Louis could win, too, if David Green can produce big numbers at first base.

But pitching will tell the story, as it will in the West, where I have to pick the Dodgers over the Braves and Padres. With Pascual Perez, who's still in jail, the Braves could beat the Dodgers. The Padres could also win if their pitchers can hand a lead to Rich Gossage in the late innings.

Houston, San Francisco and even Cincinnati also have better-than-average shots at the title. How about a sixway tie in that division?

However the races pan out, the winner of the American League championship series should win the World Series. Pick the Orioles if you want a good shot at winning. But if you're a gambling man, take the Chisox.

And for drama, imagine Jim Palmer and Tom Seaver dueling it out in the final game of the League title series.

Sauls meshes sports, academics From Page B2

(6:00-6:30), you're tired and it's difficult to force my situation, he was right " yourself to study. In addition to that, some nights you have to attend film sessions.

"A lot of athletes' grades suffer simply because there isn't enough time to socialize," Sauls explains. "It's very easy to want to relax after such a long, tiring day."

While most student-athletes have a difficult time keeping sports and academics in perspective, Sauls has learned to thrive on the challenge of doing well in both.

"Having ambition is one of the major factors that has contributed to my success," Sauls says. "Seeing the pressures it takes to make it, I've really had to apply myself to academics. But I think my being afraid of failure is probably as strong (a factor)."

Sauls also points to Coach Hayes as a setting influence. "Coach Hayes has definitely been a positive factor in my success," Sauls says. "Coach always stressed the importance of academics. He always told us to take advantage of the educational opportunities available to us. Also, if you have a problem, you talk to him."

highly stressful; it's tough on your mind and body.' You wasn't looking at it realistically. Coach told me that, ingo to class all morning and then start preparing for prac- the long run, I'd probably be better off pursuing a career the around 3 states By the time practice is over away from sports. The more I look at it, I realize that, in

> Still, the 6-1, 230-pound Sauls admits it's difficult to walk away from the sport that has been so good to him.

> "Every time I see a pro game, it eats me up," he says. "I know that I could play in the USFL. Since the season started, I don't watch as many games because I know I won't ever play football again."

> Instead, Sauls will be off to Iowa State University in the fall to pursue a master's degree in public administration. "I've already been accepted and received a graduate assistantship," Sauls says. "There's a possibility that I might possibly pursue a joint program in law."

> No matter where his travels in life take him, Sauls says he'll always look back fondly on the 1983 football season, when, as a captain, he helped mold the young Rams into winners.

"Winning the Southern Division title in the CIAA was the greatest thrill of my life," he says. "We took a lot of abuse from our fans and students. Everyone wrote us off before the season started. But we proved a lot to

"It was such a growing experience," Sauls says.

"Everyone on the team had to do some soul-searching

The subject of one discussion between Sauls and Haves was the possibility of Sauls playing pro football.

۲

after our 3-7 season in '82. The experience made us more unified. We all made a commitment to improving "There were some scouts that came around to talk with ourselves and giving 100 percent. The adversity we faced me about playing pro ball," Sauls says. "I was really enis something we can draw from the rest of our lives." thused about the prospect of playing in the pros, but I everyone.

