Using animal parts

By SUSAN HUNT
Chronicle Staff Writer

The Chronicle asked people if they thought doctors should use the organs of animals to save the lives of humans.

Yvonne Hinton, assistant vice-president for a bank: I think that it is important that scientists be free to experiment to find cures for different illnesses. I don't have any objection to scientists using animals for research.

Jacqueline Self, teacher: Animal transplants are fine if the results can be proven first through tests. I have no objections at all.

Janie Seabrooks, housekeeper: I don't think that they should use the organs of animals. If it were a member of my family, I would not want them to use an animal organ. They should use human organs.

James Graham, counselor: If it would save a human life, yes, I think that doctors should use animal organs. I am an animal lover, but I am a people lover, too.

Richard Terry, Food Lion employee: Yes. I think that doctors should use animal organs for transplants if it would save a human life. A human life is more important than an animal life.

Cynthia Stivender, student: Yes. I think that they should use animal organs. People wear the fur of animals, surely they can take their organs to save a human life.

Kenny Burton, truck driver: I don't think they should use animal organs. Humans shouldn't be running around with animal organs. It just doesn't look good.

Edith Brisco, unemployed: No. I don't think that they should put animal organs into human beings. They should put human organs into humans.

Charles Porche, insurance adjuster: I guess they have to do whatever they have to do to save a human life.

Linda Lineberger, housekeeper: Yes. I think they should use animal organs if it means saving the life of a human being. It is cruel to the animal, but if it saves a life, it's worth it.

Charlene Barnes, student: I'm baffled by it. I really don't know what I think about it. This is the first time that I have heard of doctors putting an animal organ into a human.
