because of the need to raise funds to support the next festival.

"Certainly every black person in Winston-Salem should attend but the appeal will not be limited to black people. Even white communities should be concerned with the quality of life for all human beings," said Mr. Hamlin. "Anyone who has not done anything to help end apartheid, once they see the play, they will have the motivation to join the struggle and to be active even if it's just in their thoughts."

J.W. Smith also will star in the drama, devised by Athol Fugard, John Kani and Winston Ntshona.

The opening night performance of "Sizwe Bansi is Dead" will include a slide presentation of the 1989 National Black Theatre Festival. Those that attended the festival will have the opportunity to relive the celebration, Mr. Hamlin said, and those that missed the festival will have a second chance to be a part of the celebration.

Friday's performance will be held at 8 p.m. There will be a wine and cheese reception and the slide presentation at 7:30 p.m. Additional performances will be held Dec. 2 and 3 and Dec. 8-11 at 8 p.m. There will be a matinee performance Dec. 11 at 3 p.m.
