A Friend Is Here

It's Okay to Cry With Them

Friends, as well as the bereaved, may need the opportunity to acknowledge their loss. Crying is a means by which people acknowledge the death of a loved one and work their way out of despair. Tears are not evidence of weakness. Weeping can be a shared experience.

... And Even Laugh

You can also laugh with your friends when they need to laugh -- not with forced frivolity, but with the enjoyment of recounting humorous times they had with their loved one. Death does not put a ban on laughter.
