us. We went into this thinking, We're adopting a child dying from AIDS.' That's the warped sense we came in with. What we have is a son living with AIDS and doing a hell of a job of it."

World AIDS Day evolved out of the World Summit of Health

Ministers on Programmes for AIDS Prevention, held in London in 1988.

Delegates from 140 nations declared 1988 a year of communications about AIDS. The first World AIDS Day, held Dec. 1, 1988, focused on the worldwide effort against AIDS by encouraging governments and communities, groups and individuals to talk about AIDS.

The theme for the 1989 World AIDS Day was "Our Lives, Our World -- Let's Take Care of Each Other."
