

North Forsyth students win science award

Six North Forsyth High School students received a $500 science award from the Alpha Pi Lambda chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha Inc. of Winston-Salem at the Recognition Program on Friday, May 22.

The science award is broken down into first, second, and third place winners in the Biological and Physical sciences.

The winners for Biological science were Sessie Vickers, who won 1st place and received $150 for her research project on "Cardiovascular Health in African and White American Adolescents"; Harley McGrew, who won 2nd place and received $75 for the research project "What are the Effects of Alcohol on Mice?"; and David Beeson, who placed 3rd and received $25 for the research project "Photobiology."

Winners in the Physical Science category were Matt Liner, who won 1st place and received $150 for his project "The Effect of Stomach Acid on Polypeptides"; Tracy Wilson, who placed 2nd and won $75 for her project "The Effect of Purity of Salt on Its Crystallization Process"; and Becky Hunter, who placed 3rd and won $25 for the project "Chemistry in your Washing Machine."

The science award is named for Lowden E. Anderson Sr., a retired middle school science teacher of the Winston-Salem/Forsyth County schools. Anderson is chairman of Community Services of his fraternity and has been involved in a Saturday tutorial program for students at risk in science at Cook Middle School, and the tutorial program at United Metropolitan Baptist Church. He is also currently making preparations for student activities in how to read science book, laboratory technique and procedure, how to design an experiment, science skills in observing, recording, mapping and graphing, and how to plan a science fair project.

These activities will take place at First Baptist Church for the 1992 "Summer Adventure Camp" from June 22 through July 31.
