was the largest margin of victory for the tournament.

Although the Winston-Salem Ladies Golf Auxilliary was able to pull off another successful tournament, there are several questions that must be answered before next year's event. This year's tournament field featured only 30 players, marking the fewest number of player the tourney has had in its history.

The auxiliary also has to determine whether October is a good month to have their event.

This year was the first time since the tournament's inception that it had been played in October. In previous years, it had been played in April.

"There are people who would have played but they simply didn't have the money [to pay the entry fee]," said Alberta Harvey, an auxiliary member. "People have lost jobs and there was a tournament in Atlanta. The Dixie Classic Fair and the Vantage Championship all contributed to the low numbers."

One auxiliary official says that next year will be different. "We are going to try and get companies to donate prizes for next year's tournament," said Willie Mae Downs. "We are also thinking about making the tournament an invitational."
