WSSU Hit With 3-Year Sanction By NCAA

Winston-Salem State University received a three-year probationary period Tuesday for violations resulting from "lack of institutional control" by the NCAA Committee of Infractions.

The violations of NCAA legislation involved the participation of ineligible student-athletes in several sports and the provision of extra benefits to football student-athletes and were announced by David Swank, head of the NCAA infractions committee from the NCAA office in Overland Park, Kansas.

According to Chancellor Cleon F. Thompson Jr., the sanctions end a three-year probe of allegations.

Among the violations found by the committee are the following:

The university's chancellor authorized the use of funds from a chancellor's discretionary fund that subsequently were used to provide extra benefits in the form of summer housing and the rental of furniture for several football student-players.

That was done when coach Bill Hayes left for North Carolina A&T University and Thompson was afraid several key football players would follow Hayes to A&T.

Two student-athletes were permitted to compete during their initial years of eligibility, even though neither qualified under NCAA initial-eligibility legislation.

Several student-athletes were permitted to practice and participate, even though the university had no high school transcripts or NCAA 48-C certification forms on file to verify their initial eligibility.

The committee determined that the violations, while somewhat limited in scope, were major "because of the direct involvement of the university administration and the inadequate exercise of appropriate institutional control in all areas of supervision of the intercollegiate athletics program."

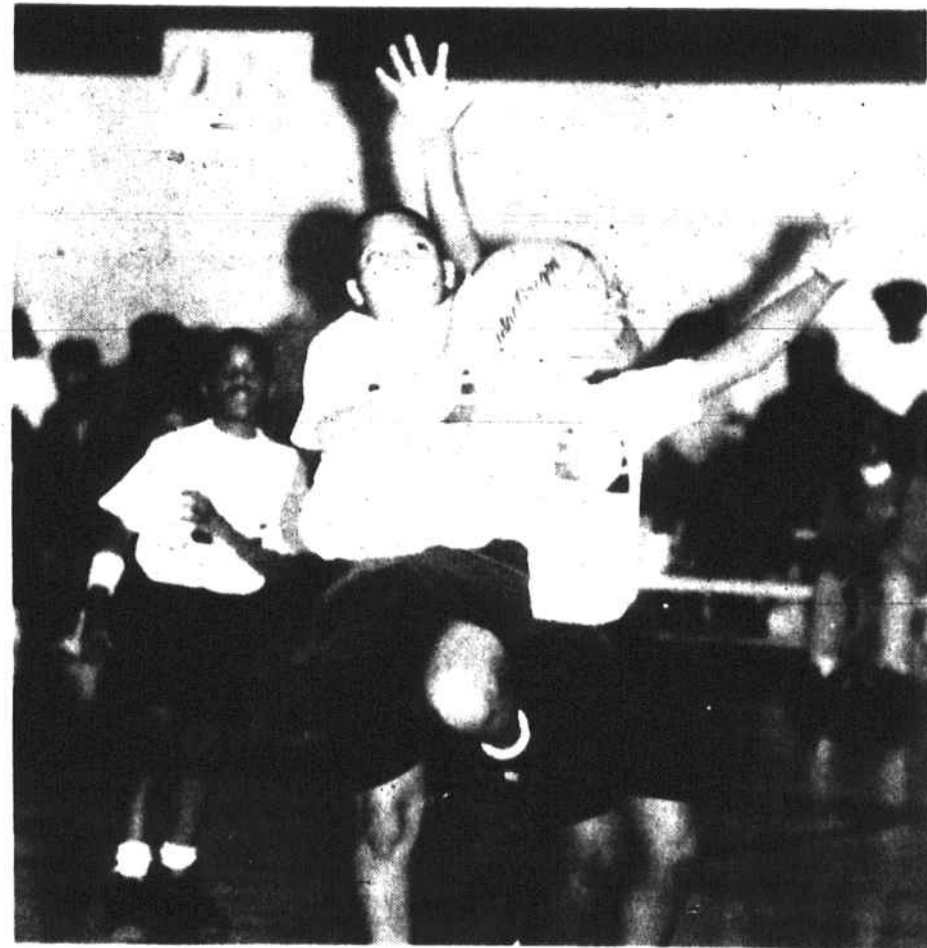

The university has received directives to:

- Eliminate postseason competition in football for the 1993 season.

- Vacate from the records the institution's stand-

Lady Rams Face Uphill CIAA Battle

Following last week's defeat at the hands of defending Central Intercollegiate Athletic Association champion Norfolk State by a 104-60 count, Winston-Salem State women's coach Stenson Conley admitted his team had the "jitters" prior to the game.

"This was our first game back after the holiday break," he said. "And they (Norfolk State) are always high powered."

That might have been an understatement.

The Spartanettes, who had been averaging 88 points a game in compiling a 9-1 overall mark, got off to a 14-0 early lead as the Lady Rams turned the ball over the first six possessions without being able to get a shot off.

Thanks to Kendra Horne, junior guard from Ansonville, NC, Winston-Salem State managed to make a game of it briefly midway through the first half as Horne got eight of her 25 points to make it 23-18 with just over 12 minutes remaining.

But Norfolk State's pressing defense, which forced WSSU to commit 53 turnovers, was the major difference in the game as the Lady Rams had considerable trouble getting the ball down the court.

They trailed at halftime, 49-32, and saw the visitors run off another 14-0 streak to start the second half before WSSU was able to score again. NSU added six more in succession for a 20-2 run and a 69-34 advantage.

After that it was simply a matter of whether or not the Spartanettes would hit the century mark. They did so with 1:15 left in the game.

On the boards, the two teams were surprisingly close with NSU holding a 48-43 advantage.

But Norfolk State hit on 52 percent from the field while Winston-Salem State managed just 41 percent.

Horne took game scoring honors with her 25 points, but only Ebony Moore, 6-2 sophomore center from Charlotte who played just 10 minutes, was the only other Lady Ram in double figures with 10 points.

Norfolk State placed four ladies in double figures, led by Deshonna Anderson and Jennine Tanks, who each hit for 22 points and had 16 rebounds between them.

"Our inexperience showed," Stenson said, as his team went winless for the sixth time in as many games.

The Lady Rams face a tough road trip this week. On Tuesday, they take on St. Augustine the CIAA runner-up last year, who according to Stenson picked up two big inside players. They play Hampton on Thursday and N.C. Central Saturday.

Asked if he saw a victory coming down the road, he smiled. "Central is winless also," he said. "Something's got to give."
