

Florida A&M's Duffey was having a great season until he suffered a broken ankle halfway through the year. Duffey scored 12 rushing touchdowns and caught 24 passes. "He's an instinctive runner," Kiger says, "with natural cut-back ability, but his major strength is catching the football."

Central State's Thompson gained more than 1,000 yards rushing last season after attending Oklahoma, where he was involved in much-publicized off-the-field problems. He "proved to be capable receiving threat," Kiger says, "although he isn't to the level of some of the other situational type backs."

Grambling's Anderson averaged 25.4 yards per catch last season. He caught five passes for 190 yards and two touchdowns against Jackson State. "He needs to become more consistent catching the football," Kiger says, "while also improving his route running skills."

Hampton's Warren, who runs a 4.41 time in the 40-yard dash, was converted to wide receiver after playing running back last season. Warren, says Kiger, can be a factor "if an organization has the luxury of waiting a few years for him to develop. Terrance could turn out to be a major factor in the NFL. Has speed to burn, is big enough to absorb a hit and is considered by the coaching staff to be a quick study."

Tennessee State's Robinson caught 140 passes for more than 2,400 yards and 19 touchdowns in his final three seasons. He also averaged 21.5 yards on kickoff returns, including a 66-yarder against Tennessee Tech for a touchdown. "Since he's small and doesn't clock in the 4.4 range," Kiger says, "NFL clubs may look past Robinson once the draft unfolds. If this happens, he should turn out to be a late-round or free-agent find, able to surprise during training camp."

Jackson State's Kimbrough runs a 4.33 in the 40, and averaged 25.7 yards per catch and scored six touchdowns last season. Kiger says, "The big question with Kimbrough is his hands and toughness across the middle."

Alcorn State's Evans caught 10 passes for 250 yards against Howard. That's a season for many college wide receivers. Evans, says Kiger, "appears frail on film, but he caught a number of his passes across the middle, showing some aggression ness after the reception."

Alabama State's Brooks recorded 102 catches for 2,180 yards and 23 touchdowns in his career to rank second on the school's all-time list. Because of his size, Kiger says, "you had to be skeptical as to whether he could ever play effectively against big-league competition." Also, his speed/size ratio could be a problem.

Florida A&M's Williams also can punt, in addition to moving defensive tackles off the line of scrimmage. "His low center of gravity provides immediate body leverage," Kiger says, "and he also has a good grasp of the techniques necessary to play the position." Williams' height could be a major problem. But good centers are difficult to find in this league.

Other players who probably will sign as free agents if they are not drafted include: David Carpenter, a

6-2, 285-pound defensive tackle from Mississippi Valley State; Kerry Henderson, a 5-7, 172-pound running back from Texas Southern; Charles Fleeks, a 5-11 1/2, 195-pound running back from Hampton; Dexter Butcher, a 5-10, 175-pound running back from Grambling; Deal Noel, a 5-9, 185-pound running back from Delaware State; Greg Clifton, a 5-9, 175-pound running back from Johnson C. Smith; Joseph Washington, a 6-2 1/4, 199-pound running back from Tuskegee; Rodney Hounshell, a 6-2, 186-pound running back from Virginia Union; Tyrone Davis, a 5-8, 160-pound running back from Florida A&M; Reginald Gilliard, a 5-11, 185-pound running back from Prairie View A&M; Earnest Greene, a 6-6, 315-pound tackle from Savannah State; Orlando Brown, a 6-6 1/2, 355-pound tackle from South Carolina State; Reginald Davidson, a 6-2, 310-pound guard from Jackson State; Robert Moorman, a 6-4, 296-pound guard from Tennessee State.

Others are: Eddie Smith, a 6-0 1/2, 345-pound defensive tackle from Texas Southern; Ronald Perry, a 6-2, 233-pound linebacker from Grambling; Darius Hadley, a 6-0 1/2, 188-pound cornerback from South Carolina State; Donnie Ellis, a 5-10 1/4, 164-pound cornerback from Texas Southern; Darren Butler, a 5-10 1/2, 185-pound cornerback from Alcorn State; Vernon Grier, a 5-11 1/2, 187-pound cornerback from South Carolina State; Tim Watson, a 6-0 1/2, 213-pound safety from Howard William Carroll, a 6-0, 200-pound safety from Florida A&M; Tommy Milton, a 5-11, 200-pound safety from Alcorn State; Alonza Barnett, a 6-2, 199-pound safety from North Carolina A&T; and Edward Buck, a 5-11 1/2, 180-pound safety from Alcorn State.
