

Reds Owner Starts Training Course

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati Reds owner Marge Schott has started diversity training, as required under terms of her one-year suspension for using racial slurs, a newspaper reported today.

The Reds' front office is scheduled to begin diversity training in May from the Cincinnati chapter of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Schott has been invited to attend but is not obligated to because she already is undergoing diversity training by a different agency, The Cincinnati Enquirer reported. The newspaper did not disclose its source.

Baseball's executive council ordered diversity training as part of the sanctions against Schott for her use of racial and ethnic slurs. The newspaper said Schott was allowed to choose the agency for her training, subject to baseball's approval.

Chip Harrod, executive director of the local NCCJ, said 15 of the Reds' senior officers will participate in the diversity training program it will conduct. The 40-hour program will be divided into five to nine sessions.

National League President Bill White wrote to Harrod on March 29 informing him that the NCCJ had been selected for the training, Harrod said.

The training group is made up of eight to 10 people from the NCCJ's staff, Harrod said. The group members include men and women, Jews, blacks and Asians. The training will combine small group discussions, role-playing, videotapes and personal reflection, Harrod said.

"We operate under the assumption that every human being has the potential to behave in prejudicial ways," he said. "We help trainees to be vigilant to that and hold themselves in check when they find themselves slipping into bad habits or behaviors."

Reds general manager Jim Bowden declined comment, except to confirm that NCCJ would do the training for the club.

Schott could not be reached for comment. Telephone calls to her home went unanswered.
