

Woman Receives Youth Service Award

Lena C. Turner, Human Resources, Sara Lee Knit Products, was recently presented the Ina Bolton Humanitarian Award at the Top Ladies of Distinction Annual Conference in Atlanta.

The organization was founded to help alleviate the moral and social problems confronting youths. Since its founding, the Top Ladies of Distinction has expanded its objectives to include improving the status of women, service to senior citizens and community beautification.

She was especially recognized for a youth education role model program she developed at Sara Lee Knit Products, which provides career awareness to youths through highly successful company role models. Turner is a manager, Employee Relations, and has been with Sara Lee for 20 years. The Business Youth Career Awareness program was especially designed to provide corporate career awareness to minority youths.

Turner is married to Larry Turner. They have a daughter who is a sophomore at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. They are members of Bethlehem A.M.E. Zion Church in Pfafftown, where they also reside.

UNC-C Student to Intern at Bank

A 19-year-old rising junior at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte has joined Southern National Corporation through a nationally recognized internship program designed to prepare minority youth for business careers.

Kimberly E. Moore, a High Point native who is studying accounting, will spend the summer at Southern National's Corporate Support Center in Charlotte, where she will work as an intern of INROADS, a privately-funded organization that relies, in part, on corporate sponsorships to provide career training for minorities.

"This program provides us with an opportunity to work with talented individuals who have excellent management potential," said senior vice president Robert Williams, director of Human Resources in Winston-Salem. "What better way for an individual to get to know your business and corporate culture than to have them spend some time with you during their summers."

To qualify, INROADS interns must attend a four-year university and meet academic standards. As part of the conditions of the program, corporate sponsors must consider hiring the intern for permanent employment following graduation from college. Moore is the second undergraduate to join Southern National through the INROADS program. Duke Univer-

Red Cross to Teach Children's Course

First Aid for Children Today (FACT) is a program developed to help children learn how to understand the important role they have in managing their own health and safety as well as the health of the environment in which they live. The program will be taught by the Northwest North Carolina Chapter of the American Red Cross during August.

The Critter Clan, a group of 23 friendly animal characters, guides children in grades one through three on a fun path to discover ways to help themselves and others be aware of dangers, prevent injuries and harm, and respond when injuries do happen. Not only do children learn about health for themselves, they learn what measures they can take to help the environment as well. The Critter Clan animals represent a multi-cultural perspective as they are named with words from six different languages — Spanish, Japanese, Sioux, Hawaiian, Swahili and English.

The course will be taught from 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., Monday through Thursday, Aug. 16-19. The course costs $15, and participants receive a "fun book" with puzzles that reinforce the lessons.

Participants may bring a snack for mid-morning and 50 cents for a soft drink if desired. Upon completion of the program, each participant receives a FACT certificate and colorful stickers to signify completion of each program unit.

To register for more information, call the Office of Health Services, 724-0511.
