Scholarship Program Held

At the Greensboro Joseph Koury Convention Center, judges selected Kim Rolle from Nassau, Bahamas, and Jason Shaffner from Dallas, Texas as winners of the 22nd Annual Miss and Mr. Black Teenage Scholarship Program.

More than 30 teen-agers from across the country and beyond participated in the program to win scholarships to historically black colleges and universities. As program winners, Rolle and Shaffner can receive scholarships to institutions such as Hampton University, Howard University and Spelman College.

Participants in the program are between the ages of 14 and 17 and are judged on the articulation, creativity, poise, and talent - not physical attractiveness, clothes or size.

The Black Teen-age Scholarship Program is a subsidiary of the Washington D.C.-based Black Teenage World Educational Fund. The organization's prime objectives are to raise the cultural awareness of black teen-agers and to provide educational outreach opportunities. Over the past 22 years, millions of dollars in college scholarships have been provided to teen-agers through the program.

Director to Lead Lecture

The Sawtooth Center for Visual Art will present a lecture, "Folk Art from All Over! Motivation and Methodology" on Tuesday from 7-9:30 p.m. The lecture will be delivered by Brooke D. Anderson, director of the Diggs Gallery at Winston-Salem State University.

Anderson will talk about the work of self-taught artists from places as diverse as Poland, Brazil, Mexico, South Africa, England and the United States.

Discussion will begin with semantics: what is folk art, self-taught art and outsider art. Looking at individual artists, participants will explore different methods and creative impulses.

Participants are encouraged to bring different scrap materials with them for a hands-on collaborative concluding project. The fee for the program is $4. Preregistration is required for all Sawtooth Center classes and workshops. For information and registration call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. at 723-7395.
