by almost $700. Conrad, who got 31 percent of the vote to Burke's 69, also outspent the alderman.

Burke's largest contributor was Logan Burke, her husband, who gave $200.

Conrad had some of the city's best-known African-American businessmen in his corner with Lafayette Jones, president of SMSI, leading the pack with a $1,000 contribution. Thomas Trollinger, owner of Contract Office Furnishings Inc., donated $300, and Chandler Lee, owner of Classic Cadillac, gave $250.

Alderman Larry Womble of the Southeast Ward, who trounced his two Democratic rivals by capturing 65 percent of the vote, raised slightly more than $1,400, of which he spent only a third. Most of that was on printing and postage.

Womble had a total of 29 contributors. The largest contributor was Weston, who gave $500.

Cooper, from the board of elections, said that what candidates do with any money leftover is entirely up to them. In the past, she said, some candidates have thrown parties for their campaign workers.

Johnson, with about $1,600 left in her coffer, said that she will use that money to finance her campaign as it heads toward the general election in November. Johnson emphasized on the night she won the primary that she will have to face Republican Wilbert Andrew Allen Sr. and wasn't about to take the rest of the election for granted.

came to get autographs of Winston-Salem State University and Wake Forest University athletes. Also on hand were: former WSSU coach Clarence "Bighouse" Gaines; Charlie Davis, a former basketball great at Wake Forest and former professional basketball star; and the men's and women's basketball coaches at WSSU. The WSSU cheerleaders also signed autographs and then performed two routines.

Barefield said that because Whitaker Elementary is located in Buena Vista, an exclusive, predominantly white area of town, African Americans may feel uncomfortable visiting the school. She said that a third of the student body at the school is black. The Parental Involvement Committee, an ad hoc outgrowth of the PTA, sponsored the event, Barefield said.

Cheerleaders from Winston-Salem State University signed autographs for students of Whitaker Elementary.

Gaines, who was the winningest active basketball coach before he retired this year, told the audience of about 75 people — most of them children — that parental involvement is the answer to a lot of the "neighborhood problems." He said that while raising his two children "there wasn't a single evening when I didn't know where they were."

"I've been trying for 49 years in East Winston to get parents out to support their children," Gaines said.

He applauded those whites who came out, saying, "There are a lot of people on the other side of (U.S.) 52 who don't know what's on this side."

Jaffee Ferree, a banker at Wachovia Bank of North Carolina, who is also a single parent, was one of the event's organizers.

"I think it was very positive,"

she said, "but I was disappointed in the attendance."

Ferree said the organizers are going to meet soon to discuss the next meeting, which will be held in November and in the same location. They will also discuss ways to get black parents involved. Ferree suggested that they may have to go into the neighborhoods and knock on doors.

The reason the church was picked as a meeting place, she said, was because most of the children who attend Whitaker live in the church's neighborhood.

She said that two black children from the neighborhood came to last Thursday's meeting without their parents. Organizers had to take them home when the meeting was over, she said.

tipped off to his whereabouts.

Lyons, 21, whose last known address was 2066 K Court, Apt. G, in Greensboro, and Hall, 23, of 222 Motor Road, Apt. 59, were charged with murder and were being held last night in the Forsyth County Jail with no bond allowed.

No arrests have been made in the Pendergrass case.

The police have issued Ogburn Station businesses photocopies of the two suspects.

Police Capt. Linda Davis said officers responded to a shooting call and found Stafford lying on the floor of his store with multiple gunshot wounds. A small-caliber handgun was used, she said. A medical examiner pronounced Stafford dead at the scene, she said. A suspect was spotted running from the store shortly after the shooting. No car was used, she said.

Davis refused to say what led investigators to the suspects so quickly after the murder. However, Lt. T.L. Reavis, one of the officers who worked on the investigation, said that witnesses who had seen the men running from the scene helped identify who they were.

Shane Ashburn, an employee of the store, said most of Stafford's customers were African American. Stafford was white.

Ashburn and other business owners in Ogburn Station expressed disbelief Tuesday afternoon at Stafford's death. None of those who talked to the Chronicle said that they had had any serious problems with robberies or break-ins.

Carl Williams, who once owned the Ogburn Station Hardware store next door to Sam's, said he had known Stafford for about 10 years and described him as an "easy-going person."

"I'm sorry he's gone," he said.

Williams said that during the 47 years he ran the hardware store he had been robbed five times. He said Stafford's store sold a "little bit of everything. It was just a general store."

The wire-mesh fence enclosing the storefront Tuesday afternoon had been decorated with flowers and a reef. Just inside the fence sat stacks of car tires, and on a window was a neon advertisement for beer. On the ground in front of the door, in blue chalk, someone had scribbled "We Love You."

Sam Simmons, the manager of Ogburn Station Hardware, said Stafford was a "real fine man."

He called the killing "senseless" and said he could deal with his death better if the man died while trying to save someone's life.

"There's a lot of stuff going on that there's no call for," he said about the violence that has plagued the city this year.

Ashburn, who worked for Stafford for two years, said that Stafford kept a ledger in which he recorded the debts of his customers. When people didn't have any money, or had run out of food stamps, Stafford often let them make purchases on credit. Sometimes they would pay him back, she said.

She described Ogburn Station as a small community of blacks and whites where everybody knows each other and everybody gets along. She believes that the two men responsible for Stafford's death were from outside the community.

She said she also believed that Stafford had no warning that he was about to get robbed or shot, because he had a gun and would have used it, and the silent alarm had not been triggered.

She said that a group of black neighbors, who were on subsistence, pooled their money and presented it to the Stafford family.

Last Halloween, she and Stafford bought small paper bags and filled them with candy.

"All the kids came to us to get candy," said Ashburn, choking back tears.
