"The Republicans put us out to pasture for eight years," said Ben Joyce (right), owner of the recently re-opened N.C. License Plate Agency at 667 Peters Creek Parkway. Joyce was referring to Gov. Jim Martin, who served two terms. Because he is a Democrat, Joyce said he was forced by the Republican administration to close his business. However, the agency that operated while Joyce's was closed continues to do business. That agency is in the Parkway Plaza Shopping Center, less than a mile from Joyce's business. From left are his wife Joyce Joyce, and employees Ruth Chappell and Keia Smith, granddaughter of Charles S. Smith, the black Republican who lost last month's bid for mayor. Commissioner Alexander Killens (not pictured), the first African American to head the Department of Motor Vehicles, visited the office during its open-house festivities.
