

Tournament honoree David Lash greets several junior varsity players during the press conference held last Thursday. Lash is a former coach and athletic director at Carver, Atkins and East Forsyth high schools.

something like this," East Forsyth Athletic Director David Bumgamer said of the tournament, which is sponsored by Coca-Cola and Lee Jeans in addition to The Chronicle. "Last year, this tournament was small and I'm glad to see it will get the support it deserves to keep it growing."

The tournament was developed by Sportsmen Club spokesman Ike Howard two years ago. During the inaugural year of the tournament, funding was an obstacle that clouded the future of the event. Now, Howard said there is a possibility of moving to a neutral site in future years, possibly at the Lawrence Joel Coliseum annex.

This year, five of the eight Winston-Salem high schools will be represented in the tournament — Carver, East Forsyth, Glenn, Mt. Tabor and North Forsyth. Rounding out the eight-team field will be High Point Andrews and Dudley and Smith high schools of Greensboro. For the second year, Carver will be the host school.

"It gives the kids some exposure to Christmas tournament play before they move up to the varsity level," North Forsyth coach Tommy Witt said. "It also gives them something to do during the holidays in terms of playing."

Both coaches and athletic directors agree that the tournament will curb the amount of idle time that adolescents have during the two-week holidays.

"If a team does not play in a Christmas tournament, it could be as long as month before they play another game," said Carver Athletic Director Robert Wynn, one of the organizers for the tournament. "We want to eliminate as much of that down time as possible with this tournament. Now the teams can compete with other teams instead of each other."

Another advantage of the tournament is the teams can get a look at some of the opposition before conference play begins in January. A lot of the coaches embraced the possibility of playing a conference team during the tournament.

"I couldn't think of a better way for our players to get some valuable experience than this tournament," Glenn coach Ernest Nichols said. "My team is going to be good, but it's very young. Some of these freshmen can get an opportunity to know what it's like playing during the Christmas holidays now instead of waiting a couple of years."

But most importantly, some of the players feel the tournament is a chance to showcase their talents. In previous years, the players have not had a chance to play many non-conference games in December and only a handful of schools will send a junior varsity team to play in a tournament.

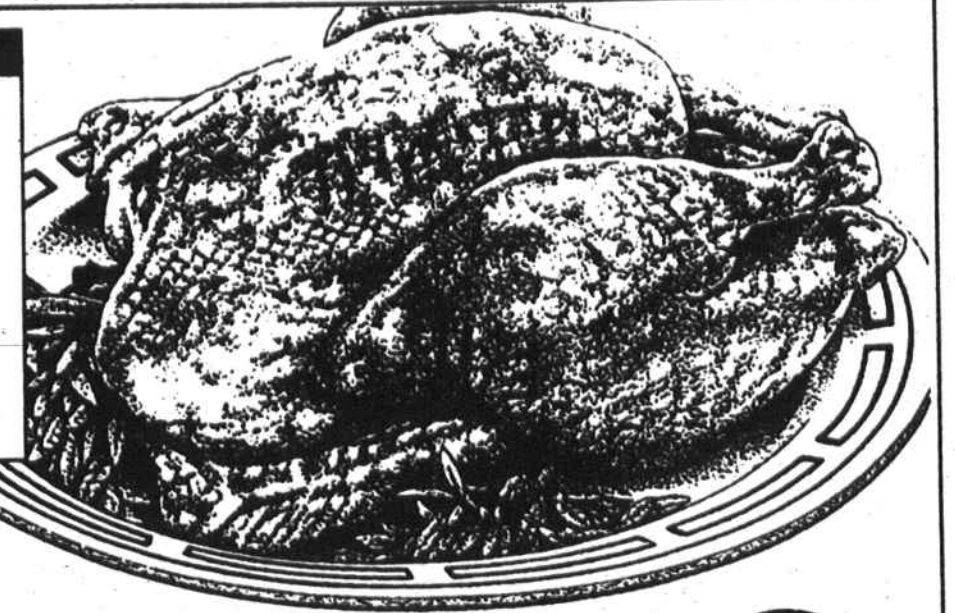

"I want to work on my defense and rebounding the ball a little bit more before the tournament," said Greensboro Dudley forward Kenneth Hawkins. "I want to be a good player as possible in the next couple of games before then."
