Violence Counselor: Simpson Arrest Will Open Eyes

HUNTINGTON, W. Va. (AP) — The murder accusations against O.J. Simpson could help focus attention on problems of domestic violence, an expert said.

Simpson is charged with murder in the stabbings last week of his ex-wife, Nicole Brown Simpson, and a friend of hers, Ronald Goldman. The former college football Heisman Trophy winner and NFL Hall of Famer says he is innocent.

Mrs. Simpson had filed domestic violence complaints against Simpson during their marriage, officials said. Huntington native Betty Blevins-Fisher serves on the Los Angeles County Domestic Violence Council. She said national tragedies like Simpson's often force the public to confront difficult issues.

"The spotlight is turned on domestic violence, and we want to use the opportunity to see that these types of tragedies don't occur again," she said.

Blevins-Fisher, who graduated from Huntington East High School in 1959, also is executive director of Haven Hills, a domestic violence shelter serving the San Fer-Al Cowlings who allegedly drove a vehicle with O.J. Simpson as a passenger as he eluded police on a two county chase was charged with one count of aiding and abetting in Simpson's escape.

nando Valley in California. She said many people either don't believe or refuse to acknowledge that domestic violence occurs frequently and cuts through all social and economic lines.

Paula Crawford, a member of the West Virginia Coalition Against Domestic Violence, agreed that the media focus on the Simpson case could help expose domestic violence.

"If anything positive comes out of this whole thing, it will be increased awareness," Crawford said. "It would take a couple of years to mount a campaign with the same effect."

Crawford helped lobby the Legislature this year for the state's new "warrantless arrest" law, which lets police make domestic violence arrests without witnessing the violence and without warrants.

While West Virginia has the nation's lowest overall crime rate, its murder rate ranks near the middle of the 50 states, and about 40 percent of its murders stem from domestic violence, Crawford said.

"We have a problem that people may not realize," she said.

John E. Jacob, recently retired president and chief executive officer of the National Urban League, has been named executive vice president and chief communications officer at Anheuser-Busch Companies, Inc., it was announced today. He will assume his new duties July 1.

"We have long benefited from John's insight and skill as a member of our board of directors," said August A. Busch III, chairman and president, Anheuser-Busch Companies, Inc. "I am extremely pleased that we will now have ongoing access to his leadership qualities as a member of our senior management team."

In his new position, Jacob, 59, will direct the company's communication activities, with a special emphasis on community, industry and public concerns, and other major issues facing Anheuser-Busch. He will also serve as a member of the company's senior management team, taking part in decision making on matters of basic policy and overall strategic direction. "The perspective John has gained as president of the Urban League will stand us in good stead as we join our senior management team," Busch said. "His understanding of the attitudes and concerns that are reshaping America as it enters the 21st century will enable our company to perform more effectively and with increased sensitivity to the needs of the communities we serve."

In addition to his duties as executive vice president and chief communication officer, Jacob will retain his seat on the company's board of directors, a position he has held since 1990. He will also serve on the company's 15-member Policy Committee, which is involved in all decisions on major strategic and policy issues.

"I am fully familiar with Anheuser-Busch, and with its management team," Jacob said. "I could not be more enthusiastic about an opportunity to fill such a significant role in such a great company."

Jacob was president and chief executive officer of the National Urban League, one of the nation's most respected community-based social service and advocacy agencies, from 1982 until his retirement earlier this year. In his leadership position, he directed an organization that serves million of Americans through its New York headquarters facility, government affairs and research department located in Washington, D.C., a National Regional Service Center and affiliates in 113 cities.

A native of Houston, he received his undergraduate and MSW degrees from Howard University. Jacob began his Urban League career in 1965 as director of education and youth incentives at the Washington, D.C., Urban League. Since that time, he has served in a wide variety of posts, including executive director of the San Diego Urban League from 1970 to 1975 and president of the Washington, D.C., Urban League from 1975 to 1979.

He is also the author of a weekly newspaper column, "To Be Equal," distributed to more than 600 newspaper, has written numerous articles on national issues for a variety of major publications, and is a widely sought after speaker who has addressed many of American's most prestigious forums.

"His familiarity with the news media's operations and needs make John an extremely good choice to direct our company's external communications activities," Busch said.

In that capacity, Jacob will assume many of the duties formerly held by Michael J. Roarty, who announced his retirement as executive vice president/corporate marketing and communications, last week.

In addition to his position on the Anheuser-Busch board, Jacob is a director of the National Park Foundation, the Peter Drucker Foundation and the Economic Policy Institute.
