Cheryl Ingram has a message for young people - 'You can make it!'

To young people who have had hardships or have been told they couldn't make it or thought they couldn't make it - Cheryl Ingram has a message that you can make it, no matter what you've been

As a high school dropout, teen-age mother and hotel maid, Ingram was the product of a single-parent household. At a very early age, Ingram was often labeled as a "sta-tistic" and told that she would never amount to anything in life. A lot of times people judged her actions without understanding what pro-voked the actions. We are now finding out that teen-agers are not just "bad" but sometimes the things that they live through and experience cause them to make decisions that sometimes even hurt them. Because teen-agers tend not to share their problems and insecurities with adults, a lot of times there is no one to know how they feel so they lean on their peers. all know that a person who already dysfunctioncannot help someelse become functional.

Even though the odds were against Ingram, her life changed when she gave her life to the Lord as a teenager. God strategically put people in her life who began to say to her, "You can be anything!" She listened and obeyed those people. Soon, she began to see herself out of the eyes of God and the people who believed in her. And God allowed her to have major accomplishments in her life. Ingram has been married to Pastor Byron Ingram for 21 years. They have three sons, Bryant Gentry, Elmo Gentry and Joshua Ingram. She gives God all the glory

She is now a pastor, homeown er, day-care business owner and keynote speaker. She has earned A+ computer networking certifica-tion, which makes her a personal computer technician.

On May 11 at 7:30 p.m. at Wait Chapel of Wake Forest University, Ingram will graduate with high honors from Forsyth Technical Community College with an associate degree in information systems and a diploma in computer programming. While pursuing her degree, she maintained a 4.0 GPA, was placed on the President's List and was inducted into the Phi Theta Kappa International Honor

Ingram says that she could not have done it all if it had not been for her "El Shaddai" - her God that is more than enough

She wants all teens to know that if God can do it for her, He can do it for them.

Group goes to Charleston for annual retreat seminar

SPECIAL TO THE CHRONICLE

The Interdenominational Ministers' Wives journeyed to Charleston, S.C., for an annual retreat seminar, by motorcoach of Holiday Tours.

The wives toured Boone Hall Plantation and Magnolia Plantation and Gardens. It proved interesting and informative, with much learning about some of the condi-tions and ways our slave forepar-ents had to live. The wives saw and heard stories, more than 300 years of American history. Seeing and handling some of the artifacts of the slaves were learning experiences that will remain a long time.

The wives took a boat ride to the island of Fort Sumter. Fort Sumter is known for the first act of war in the Civil War.

The workshops of the wives were held in the evenings, over coffee, tea and snacks, with Althea Taylor Jones, Ph.D., as the facilita-
