Family Life Council announces male responsibility program training

The Family Life Council of Greater Greensboro Inc. announces its annual Wise Guys national training Nov. 1 and 2 at The Marriott in downtown Greensboro. Representatives from interested agencies throughout the country will attend to learn how to implement the program in their own communities.

Wise Guys is an adolescent pregnancy prevention program designed for young men between the ages of 10 and 15, which aims at promoting sexual responsibility in that population. In April, the National Campaign to Prevent Teen Pregnancy honored the Family Life Council's Wise Guys program in recognition of its leadership in helping young men reduce their risk of unplanned parenthood and sexually transmitted diseases.

According to data gathered from past Wise Guys participants, boys from the program showed significant gains in areas of knowledge such as sexuality and contraception, improvement in communication with parents and more positive sex role attitudes. Currently, the program is offered in most Guilford County middle schools and several community locations.

For more information, contact the Family Life Council at 333-6890.

Actor

During a scene being shot in front of a group of 60 black children visiting the set from Watts, Young refused to say a line that included a racist reference to black people.

"Here was these kids watching this black cowboy in action, and I didn't feel that line was valid for the character, so I refused to say it," Young told the magazine.

Young continued to act occasionally in the 1980s, including a role in the 1981 miniseries "Palmerstown USA." But he eventually decided to stop pursuing his career in acting, said his daughter Saudia Young.

"His focus became more spiritual," she said.

Young is survived by his wife, Barbara, and children El Mahdi, Jemal Lucien, Lovelady and Saudia.
