

University to welcome guests from around the world

BY COURTNEY GAILLARD
THE CHRONICLE

Winston-Salem State University will host the 13th annual Model United Nations conference (NMUN) at the Adam's Mark Hotel April 11-14. The conference will bring together students from colleges around the state who are members of the N.C. countries that make up the United Nations (UN) to address the same global issues currently on the agenda of the UN. The conference comes at a time when conflict resolution is being faced by many leaders around the world from the United States to the Middle East, and students acting in these role-playing dialogues can widen start up a branch of the organization. This conference will mark the third time that WSSU will host NMUN, having hosted one in 1991 and again five years later. Participating or consortium schools of the NCCIE rotate hosting the NMUN each year. Local students will get the opportunity to discuss world required to remain in character throughout the mock deliberations on any given issue. "When the students simulate a country, they have to know its culture, its religion, geography, economic and military capabilities and world that they may not necessarily have knowledge of or even support. "We look forward to effective deliberations by students on topics that they will be discussing and we are also looking a big effort to support the conference to make it a worthwhile educational experience for both the students, faculty and dignitaries from other universities. Although the majority of students who attend NMUN are political science majors, the Model UN is open to students working toward degrees in all disciplines

Consortium for International and Intercultural Education (NCCIE) to conduct mini-dialogues to understand the differences that exist among the United States and other countries.

Student delegates will pose as ambassadors or diplomats representing the their communication and interpersonal skills. The Model UN began on the campus of WSSU when Dr. Donald Mac-Thompson, professor of social sciences, and several WSSU students received information from the United Nations Association-USA about the chance to topics concerning politics, security, economics, health and conflict. In past years, student delegates included in NMUN came from Canada, Russia, Japan and Ireland, to name a few. Students must assume the roles and platforms of the countries they are representing and are so forth of the entire country," Mac-Thompson said. Mac-Thompson appreciates the chance for WSSU to host the conference again because it presents an opportunity for WSSU students to do extensive research on countries and various forms of government around the
