

Sigma chapters 'Bowl for Kids' Sake'

SPECIAL TO THE CHRONICLE

For the 16th straight year, the brothers of Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity, Inc. spent the last Saturday in February taking part in Bowl for Kids' Sake, an annual fundraiser for Big Brothers Big Sisters.

The event took place at AMF Lanes on Jonestown Road. Members of the Delta Alpha (WSSU) and Delta Sigma (Alumni) chapters of Phi Beta Sigma joined many other bowlers.

Bowl for Kids' Sake raises 30 percent of Big Brothers Big Sisters' annual budget. The money generated goes directly toward matching children with carefully-screened, caring Big Brother and Big Sister volunteers.

Big Brothers Big Sisters Services, Inc. exists to empower children to reach their full potential by continuously recruiting, developing, and training mentors to provide professionally supported, one-to-one Big Brother and Big Sister relationships.

Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity, Inc. is comprised of 150,000 college-educated men and focuses on issues that impact the youth and their communities. Bowl for Kids Sake falls under Social Action, one of three national programs of Phi Beta Sigma.

To volunteer as a Big Brother or Big Sister, call Amy Mack at 336-724-7993.

Anniversary program

The Nurses' Ministry of

"terrific" turkey chili with sweet potato cornbread, sauteed apples and yogurt by the team of Majoyree Smalls, Terry Messick and Cymone James. The team that included Roberts-Davis, who has been accepted at Oakwood University in Alabama to study psychology and criminology, and Line, who is headed to Guilford Tech to study culinary arts, came in third-place.

All the winners received a trophy and a monetary prize.

The other competitors were the team of Brittany Norris, Briana Howell and Lindsey Harkins, who prepared BBQ grilled chicken strips with baked sweet potato wedges and a fruit yogurt parfait, and Brian Kelly, John Glenn and Lauren Wolfe, whose entry was a chicken quesadilla with baked sweet potato fries and a fruit relish.

All the submissions were so tasty that Chartwells announced at the event that it will serve all five meals - not just that of the winning team - at local schools.

Sarah Klinzing of Healthy Schools was on hand for the competition. She said she hopes the contest draws attention to the need for more funding for school lunch programs, which she says are in need of tastier healthy food that will be more attractive to students.

"We operate under the simple premise that healthy kids make better learners," she said.

to fries and a yogurt and fruit parfait.

Hertz said, like all the teams, she and her teammates went through several versions of their meal to try to meet the nutritional standards and learned a lot about nutrition in the process. She said she's excited that the meal will be served in schools and is confident students will love it.

"They're going to go 'I can go buy lunch today and it's going to be amazing,' and I'm glad I could help with that, that's exciting," said Hertz, who also plans to continue studying culinary arts in college.

Second place went to the

As the judges ate and marked their score sheets, they asked students about how they made their meals and how it could be replicated in school cafeterias. The meals seemed to be a hit. One judge even joked they should have doggie bags to take the left overs home.

After the panel had its fill and its say, the team of Corrine Hertz, Hyden Cramer and Issac Barham won first-place for their pulled chicken BBQ sandwich with baked sweet potatheir recipes. Their dishes had to be submitted for a nutritional evaluation to ensure they meet with the surprisingly strict nutritional standards used in school cafeterias.

For the competition, the students, decked in chef uniforms, prepared their meals in the Career Center's kitchen under the watchful eye of culinary instructors Darlene Owens and Dennie Veasey. The students then served their meals to a panel of eight judges.

The team of Antonette Roberts-Davis, Jordan Line and Jarrae Timmons, who was unable to attend last week's competition finale, served up chicken salad with mixed vegetables and cinnamon chips served with vanilla yogurt.

"I'm a student, so I tend to not like school lunches," Roberts-Davis, who has her own dessert business (Sweets by Sweetness), told the judges. "Something I prepare for myself a lot of times that's quick and easy is chicken salad."

Roberts-Davis said in order to meet nutritional standards they used cajun seasoning and pepper instead of salt. They also used sugar sparingly, instead relying on honey to add sweetness.

The judges' panel consisted of Board of Education Members Marilyn Parker and Jill Tackabery; assistant superintendents Darrell Walker and David Burleson; Chartwells'
