she believed that Kennedy would provide her with the help and hands-on approach she needs.

This is Kennedy's first year as a magnet school, and the latest reincarnation for the East Winston school. which now shares its sprawling campus with the new Career Center and the Carter High School. Most recently, Kennedy was a middle school that housed the Gateway and LEAP alternative education programs.

Its new career academy magnet program also offers concentrations vin creative enterprises, construction and design and restaurant management. Kennedy officials pulled out all the stops to tout its new programs at Saturday's Fair. Students from the restaurant management program did live cooking demonstrations and offered food samples. Health science teacher Linda Coleman - decked in her white lab coat - set up a display using pharmacy tools and a CPR manikin.

Kennedy Principal Kay Rogers said that while the competition to enroll students is fierce among magnets, the interest of students always comes first.

"We like to say it's gracious competition because if a student comes to us and they fit another school, we refer them and the other schools are doing the same thing," she said. "But the thing I think is so wonderful is that students have so many ' options in the district."

Kennedy currently has 100 students in its magnet high school, with plans to add 100-150 more students per year. Kennedy Assistant Principal Nathan Burton said he hopes to follow the lead of magnets like Paisley IB Magnet School, which have become both racially diverse and academically successful.

"Yes, it has worked, and we're hoping the same will happen to Kennedy," said Burton.

Paisley was a dying middle school with dwindling attendance before it became International an Baccalaureate magnet school eight years ago. It now has a diverse student body of 820 students in grades 6-10 and is a School of Distinction, meaning that 80 percent of students perform on above grade level on end of year testing.

But Paisley wasn't resting on its laurels at the Fair. The school set-up an eye-

Think about it. He loves so much that He makes a way for us to return to Him. Reconciliation is of God, not man. Joseph doesn't want his brothers to anguish over their decision many years ago. Paisley Assistant Principal Lisa Bodenheimer said the secret to Paisley's recruiting success has been positive word of mouth spread by parents.

"We want our students to choose us because we are the right place for them," she said. "Every school has something good to offer, so it's about finding a place that you feel a part of that school's culture."

"They have classes in things you can't get anywhere else," she said.

Jordan, a seventh grader, is looking for a good magnet to attend once he enters high school. He was particularly interested in the theater program offered at Reynolds.

City rolling out large recycling carts

Taylor

SPECIAL TO THE CHRONICLE

Starting this week, the city will begin distributing blue, 96-gallon rollout recycling carts to households with curbside recycling. Residents should not use the carts until April, when all curbside recycling in Winston-Salem will switch to biweekly collection with the

to use their green carry-out bin through the end of March, said Johnnie Taylor, the city sanitation director.

4 "The rollout carts require automated collection trucks that will not enter service until · April," Taylor said. "Residents will receive their carts sometime between January 9 and the end of March, because it will take about three months to deliver all of them. But they need to put the cart aside and continue to use their green carry-out bin until April."

Through March, residents who live in neighborhoods with curbside recycling and who do not have a green bin may put their recycling in a paper or plastic bag and leave it at the curb.

The city has been testing rollout recycling in pilot neighborhoods for the past three years.

"We saw recycling volume increase by 30 percent,"

Taylor said. "Residents like the convenience of not having to separate their recycling and of only putting out their recycling every week." other

When rollout recycling begins April 2, neighborhoods will be designated for

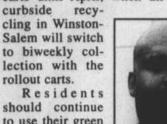

"red week" or "blue week" collection. A brochure delivered to households with the carts will indicate their collection week.

Residents in the neighborhoods where the city tested 64-gallon recycling carts will have their carts replaced with the larger 96gallon carts.
