That Can-Do Spirit

Winning only part of the goal for Lowrance team

THE CHRONICLE

For about an hour on March 22, special needs students at Lowrance Middle School were basketball stars.

Cheerleaders cheered them on from the stands, and the crowd lit up, roaring with excitement with every basket. The members of the Lowrance Polar Bears squad responded by playing hard and enjoying every minute of the game.

Lowrance is a special needs school that shares an Indiana Avenue building with Hanes Middle. The team, which includes special needs students from both schools, practices in Lowrance's small gym. The games are played in Hanes' gym, complete with a score board and stands filled with students, faculty and family members to cheer them on.

Coach Juwon Crowell, who is in his fourth year as a teaching assistant at Lowrance, said that basketball is a good way to connect to students.

"It's a great tool for teaching life lessons," he said. "It's a great tool for learning goals to be reached."
