

Davis lectures about Price

SPECIAL TO THE CHRONICLE

Dr. Lenwood G. Davis, an independent scholar and resident of Winston-Salem, recently spoke at the North Carolina Association of Historians Annual Meeting at the College of Albemarle in Elizabeth City, North Carolina. His topic was "Joseph Charles Price: The World's Orator and Founder of Livingstone College." The meeting was sponsored by both the college of Albemarle and Elizabeth City State University.

Davis

Price was one of the best known African American leaders, after Frederick Douglass, between 1880-1892. He was friends with the most influential white and African American leaders during his day, including Simon Green Atkins, the founder of Winston-Salem State University. Dr. Atkins taught at Livingstone College between 1884-1890. In 1890, Price founded the Southland magazine and selected Atkins as its editor.

Price attended the Methodist Ecumenical Conference in London, England, and after a five minute speech, The London Times called him, "The World's Orator." After lecturing in England, he returned in the fall of 1892, having $10,000 above his expenses. The A.M.E. Zion Board of Bishops selected Price as president of Zion Wesley Institute. The college resumed classes on October 9, 1882. It was Price's fundraising efforts that resulted in the founding of Livingstone College, and it was at his urging that the Board of Trustees voted to change the name of Zion Wesley Institute to Livingstone College in 1882. The changing of the name of the college honored a generous donation to the school by David Livingstone and his native England.

Davis has taught at Livingstone, Portland State University, Ohio State University, WSSU, the University of Delaware and Montclair College. He is the author of 23 books, including "Joseph Charles Price and Livingstone College," and more than 150 articles, essays, bibliographies and book reviews.
